SIR WILFRID LAURIER

WAR SUMMARY OF THE LATEST EVENTS

Sir Ian Hamilton has been too busy for some time to say much about the operations in the Dardanelles. His report published to-day is important as showing that there has been substantial progress all along the line, and during the past three weeks of continuous fighting, with heavy losses on both sides, the Allies, although they have not yet gained the objectives at which they are aiming, have made a decided advance towards them and have greatly increased the area in their possession. The Australasians have again had hard luck. After a series of desperate actions the troops from the Anzac zone carried the summit of the Sari Bahr and Chanak Bahr ridges, but owing to the fact that the attack from Suvla Bay did not make the progress counted on the Australasians were not able to maintain their positions on the crestline, and were forced to withdraw to positions close by, which have been consolidated effectively. This shows that the British troops on the Sari Bahr ridge have victory almost within their grasp and may gain and hold the crest of this dominating position any day. The ridges of Sari Bahr is 970 feet high, and from it Maidos can be ham-

SEPT. 2nd PROMISES TO BE A RED LETTER DAY FOR NAPANEE

September 2nd, promises to be a red letter day in Napanee. For the first time in the history of Canada the acting Premier and his political opponent, the ex-Premier, meet upon a common platform to address not a small group of some particular class but all Canada, upon the greatest question that ever engaged the attention of Canadians. Besides these two famous orators, there will also be upon the platform, a young man from our own district, who has actively participated in all the great battles upon the western front in which the boys of the first contingent have taken part. Capt. R. D. Ponton of Belleville who is home on sick leave has kindly consented to be present and say a few words to the boys who may be hesitating about enlisting. Let the people of this county give the brave captain such a welcome that he can carry back to the other boys at the front, a good report of how we feel towards the lads who are fighting our battles. It is to be hoped, too, that every house in Napanee will be decorated for the occasion. Fling out your banners and let our visitors know that every citizen of Napanee means to do his bit towards achieving victory for the allies.

series of desperate actions the troops from the Anzac zone carried the summit of the Sari Bahr and Chanak Bahr ridges, but owing to the fact that the attack from Suvla Bay did not make the progress counted on the Australasians were not able to maintain their positions on the crestline, and were forced to withdraw to positions close by, which have been consolidated effectively. This shows that the British troops on the Sari Bahr ridge have victory almost within their grasp and may gain and hold the crest of this dominating position any day. The ridges of Sari Bahr is 970 feet high, and from it Maidos can be hammered to pieces, while Acti Baba, 730 feet high, can be commanded by long-range guns mounted on Sari Bahr.

The British now hold lines twelve miles long on the west side of the Peninsula, and on Saturday last the Australasians advanced about three-quarters of a mile along the centre of the line and secured a strong system of knolls. The other troops engaged reached various points within the Turkish lines, but could not take the summits of the hills, and were forced, therefore, to retire to their original positions. The ground gained is regarded as of "great value," but further serious and costly efforts will be required before a final and decisive victory is won. Still victory is in sight, for the enemy gives ground in every struggle.

The Austro-German advance upon Brest-Litowsk slackens somewhat, because on the east of the Bug the Germanic armies are now on the border of the great Pripiet marshes, which form a natural defence of immense strength. The Vienna official report last night stated that northeast of Vladova, which is a town on the Bug 32 miles due south of Brest-Litowsk, German forces are driving the enemy farther into the marshy district. The audacity of the Germans is very great. Their cavalry, advancing northward from Kovel, is seeking to win a way to Kobryn, due east of Brest-Litowsk and north of the marsh area. Were this raid to prove successful the garrison of Brest-Litowsk would be in grave danger, for through Kobryn runs the only line of railway now connecting Brest-Litowsk with the interior of Russia. The movement will force the Russians either to stand off the invaders east of the Bug or to evacuate Brest-Litowsk in a hurry to avoid making that city Russia's Sedan.

The German Admiralty has issued an official statement denying that the Dreadnought cruiser Moltke was "either sunk or damaged" during the recent operations in the Gulf of Riga. The same course was followed after Commander Horton, one of the most experienced of British submarine officers, reported that he had torpedoed a battleship of the Pommern class. Upon that occasion the Germans admitted that a mine-layer had been sent to the bottom, but the present denial does not concede that the British submarine reported to have sunk the Moltke hit anything at all. The Navy, one of the most careful and well informed papers in the United Kingdom, says that up to the beginning of August Germany's losses in the Baltic had been two battleships, three light cruisers, one armoured cruiser, three destroyers, six torpedo boats, two submarines and a mine-layer. Against this Russia had lost the armoured cruiser Pallada and a mine-layer. From this it would appear that Germany had been far from fortunate heretofore in her forays up the Baltic, and that the sinking of the Moltke would have been in line with former experiences. In defence to Berlin, however, the Moltke remains on the list of German Dreadnoughts in commission.

The Augsburg, a German protected cruiser, is reported to have been seen by a Russian submarine off Danzig Monday. The record of naval losses shows that she was sunk by Russian shells in the Baltic on August 1914. It is only fair to add, however, that doubt was expressed on that occasion as to whether the vessel was the Augsburg or a sister ship, Kolberg.

Japan's new Minister of Foreign Affairs, who has for some time been Japanese Ambassador to France, being leaving France yesterday for the East is reported to have said that "since the beginning of the war Japan has been sending great quantities of aid and ammunition to Russia. Now that Russia is in the midst of grave difficulties it is our imperious duty to consider the advisability of giving still greater aid. The quantity of munitions will have to be increased. To a request for information as to whether Japan would send troops to fight in the European war, Baishii said that was a political question, and depended also on technical problems, which he was unable at present time to solve. All of which means that Japan will send an army to Europe at Russia's invitation, there is any real danger of a German triumph. Japanese guns and guns would be extremely useful along the Bug just now.

The increasing supply of munitions enables the Allies to keep hammering away steadily in answer to the German artillery fire on the western front. The midnight French official report states that there was artillery action yesterday along the front, particularly in the Champagne and Argonne where the French trench mortars and big-calibre artillery participated in proved particularly effective. In the valley of the Fecht, in the Vosges, positions won by the French during the past few days are now being garrisoned.

The great additions to the armament of the belligerents as a result of the speeding up of home manufacturing and importations from America begins to show in daily aerial raids along the various fronts. The first concern of all the commanders is to obtain skilled airmen enough to scout work adequately. The plus of machines and pilots is devoted to raiding. Lorrach, in Bavaria was bombed yesterday by the French and Brescia, in Italy, by the Austrians. A Russian aerial squadron caused a stir in Constantinople, and killed and injured 41 people, while a Zeppelin was reported enroute across the North Sea towards the east coast of England. The aerial warfare will in this time forward rapidly increase in intensity, because aeroplanes, piloted and bombs are all now available in far greater numbers than in the earlier months of the war.

The Italian official report indicates that the Austrian defence on the Isonzo is stiffening, particularly north of Goritz. It is stated that around Tolmino "the enemy's artillery has been particularly active against our works." The Italians scored a victory in the Adriatic, where an attempt by the Austrians to repair the Nabres railway, by means of which the Isonzo region is kept in touch with the west, was frustrated. On the West Trentino front, along the Tonale Pass the Italians are making a most vigorous advance, which, if pushed home, will bring them to the west side of the Adige Valley not very far from Trent.

FINE FARM TRACTOR.

An Overland Car With Great Possibilities.

After driving a 1912 Overland touring car more than twenty thousand miles over the rough roads of Saskatchewan, A. W. Bell, a native of Saskatoon, conceived the idea of putting it to work on the farm. His theory was that if the car could stand three years of travelling over the so-called roads of that section of the country, it could go a step better and do the practical work.

The Overland was converted into a tractor by the simple arrangement of putting in an extra axle under the frame, two feet in front of the rear axle of the car, on which were placed two binder wheels. After removing the rear wheels of his car, Bell replaced them with small sprocket wheels, which were connected with large sprockets on the drive wheels by a chain. This reduced the speed of the car and gave it more power.

Practically all of Bell's neighbors, who were interested in his experiment, believed the scheme to be impractical. They tried to convince him that the engine would heat up too much, and declared the gears could not possibly stand the continuous strain. But although the machine has been Practically all of Bell's neighbors, who were interested in his experiment, believed the scheme to be impractical. They tried to convince him that the engine would heat up too much, and declared the gears could not possibly stand the continuous strain. But, although the machine has been in almost constant use throughout the summer, no trouble has been developed. It has been run as many as fourteen hours a day, drawing a set of discs and a set of sixteen fast harrows, without even needing a fresh supply of water.

Bell states that he was able to seed thirty acres a day or harrow from sixty to seventy acres with his automobile. In drawing two twelve-inch bushers, he managed to break five acres of soil a day, or the equivalent to the work done by six or eight horses. The Overland consumed just seventy gallons of gasoline to put in a crop, while the cost of horse feed alone would have more than doubled the expenditure. The saving in time and labor was another important item. It took less than an hour to change the rigging of the car, so that at any time when its owner desired to make the trip to town, all that was necessary was to take off the farm equipment and transform the machine into a full-fledged touring car.

SEAPLANE SINKS TRANSPORT.

British Aviator Completely Destroys Turkish Vessel With Bomb.

MITYLENE, Aug. 24.—An exploit which may be favorably compared in importance of results attained, if not in daring of execution, to that of Lieut. Warneford, V.C., was performed on August 12 by Flight Lieutenant Edmonds in the Dardanelles.

While flying over the Straits in a seaplane he sighted a Turkish transport carrying troops. Making straight for his quarry he descended low enough to be able to drop a heavy bomb full on the deck of the vessel, resulting in an explosion which split up the transport, which perished with all on board. This is the greatest feat attained by a seaplane since the outbreak of the war, as no airman yet had succeeded in sinking a military vessel laden with troops.

ZEEBRUGGE IS SHELLED

British Fleet Batters German Submarine Base.

Important Naval Operation Since January Results in Great Damage to Harbor Works of Belgian Port and Several Guns Are Put Out of Action—German Troops Feared a Landing.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The Daily Mail's correspondent at Rotterdam writes that at daybreak yesterday a British squadron, consisting of forty cruisers and destroyers, bombarded Zeebrugge and the rest of the Belgian coast. He continues:

They bombarded the coast from the dunes, where the German 16-inch guns are defending Zeebrugge are concealed. A destroyer crept daringly close to the shore in order to draw fire from the German batteries which replied all along the coast. The fire was most violent at Knocke Zeebrugge, where the new big guns recently were laid on concrete placements.

The garrison of Zeebrugge remained in specially prepared shelters, the marines at Knocke assembled in the Grand Hotel, the officers in a British attempt at landing. The bombardment equaled in violence and duration the first shelling of November 14. The harbor works were extensively damaged, and several guns were put out of action.

Between 8 and 9 o'clock the squadron sailed northward, leaving ships to keep guard over Zeebrugge.

His Majesty's Government are anxious to think that local conditions of the cotton market are likely to be affected more favorably for such a step than they were a year ago, and more so. ## RUSSIANS OPTIMISTIC

Naval Victory Will Have Far-Reaching Effects.

German Advance on Petrograd Has Been Checked and Possibly Irreparably Defeated—Entire Campaign Hinged on the Holding—Battle Cruiser, Two Cruisers, and Eight Torpedo Boats Sunk.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The definiteness of the official Russian report on the sinking of the German battle cruiser Moltke, two other cruisers, and eight torpedo boats has sent a wave of enthusiasm throughout the country and dispelled the depression over the Russian retreat on land. Aside from the loss of the German ships, the naval engagement is regarded chiefly important for the strategic effect upon the land operations in the German sweep eastward toward Petrograd, which military observers now consider as having been checked and possibly irreparably defeated.

The German centre has pressed forward steadily, until Prince Leopold of Bavaria is near the Russian new line of defence, but the military observers say that the entire campaign hinged on the vast enveloping movement of Field Marshal von Hindenburg's forces in the north. They had succeeded in pushing far beyond Riga, to Jaconstadt, on the Dvina, but the Russians' hold on the Gulf of Riga and of the great naval base of Riga was a continual menace in von Hindenburg's rear.

It would appear from the Petrograd despatches that the admiral in command of the Russian naval forces in the Gulf of Riga permitted the German fleet to work its way through the narrow entrance to the gulf, when at his leisure he directed the attack that cost the Germans so dearly. Not only, according to Petrograd, did the Russian fleet overwhelm the German forces, but, having destroyed the bulwark of the German battle line, finally drove the invaders to flight from the gulf and into the comparatively open waters of the Baltic.

But the Russian victory did not end with the defeat of the German naval forces. The invading fleet was accompanied by four enormous transports, all crammed with troops. These troops attempted to make a landing on the shore of Pernov Bay, on the north-eastern shoulder of the Gulf of Riga. Either the accompanying warships were unable to support the landing of the troops or the Russian strategy in some way overcame the advantage of German naval guns, for the troops were permitted to land and were then attacked and exterminated by the Russian forces at that point.

The Petrograd despatches say that the Russian troops at Pernov did not even have the support of artillery. Furthermore, they were taken completely by surprise. How they accomplished the utter defeat of a force which must have numbered some 8,000 men, aided by the gunfire of convoying warships, and later captured the transports as well is not explained.

This account of Russian successes in the Gulf of Riga was supplied by the President of the Duma, M. V. Rodzianko, at Petrograd.

A despatch to the Central News, which is corroborated by the Times, gives the text of the announcement of the President of the Duma as follows:

RUSHED FROM CEYLON

OSSOWETZ CAPTURED.

Germans Announce Fall of Russian Fortress.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The capture by the Germans of the fortress of Ossowetz, officially announced by Berlin yesterday, gives them another stronghold, only Grodno and Brest-Litowsk remaining in the central section. It also gives them the main point on the railway to Bielsk and Brest-Litowsk.

Two battles are in progress on far separated sections of the 400-mile line from the Baltic to Brest-Litowsk, which represents the Russian second line of defence. The first of these battles is being waged along the Kovno-Vilna railway and the River Niemen, and the second and most important around Brest-Litowsk.

Unofficial despatches from Petrograd last night indicated that the Grand Duke Nicholas is making a determined stand at this, the key fortress of his second line, which already is encircled on three sides by the Germans. According to these despatches the great fortified camp is almost within range of the heavy guns, which the Germans are bringing up by hundreds, and the city and forts are subjected to constantly increasing bombardments from the air by great fleets of aeroplanes and dirigibles.

The Austro-German forces, according to official reports, have forced their way across the rivers and roads both north and south of the fortress, and strong forces are engaged against it from the west. Intense interest is manifested in military circles as to whether the Grand Duke intends to make a stand here or fall farther back, abandoning his second line, and the indications to the minds of military critics are that he will engage the Germans in a decisive battle.

Two of the three railways upon which Brest-Litowsk and the Russian army operating on that front depend for their supplies are seriously menaced by the Germans. One, the road to Petrograd through Bielsk and Bielostok, already is reported cut.

QUICK ACTION TAKEN.

Italian Transports and Warships Prosecute War With Turkey.

ROME, Aug. 24.—A fleet of transports filled with Italian infantry and artillery sailed from Italy yesterday for a secret destination. They picked up anchor simultaneously at Naples, Syracuse, Taranto, and Brindisi, and steamed away under escort of numerous warships. But while the destination of this expeditionary force is not made public by the War Office, there is little doubt but that

DREAMS THAT COME TRUE.

And Those That Don't and the Workings of the Sleep Mind.

Of course, some dreams come true. The most hardheaded business man will have to admit it. But the proportion of them? That's where people differ.

Few people, if any, sleep without dreaming, and even on the basis of only one dream a night this would mean over seventeen thousand dreams for each person fifty years old. Yet few of us can recall even seventeen occasions in which a coming event has been forecasted in a dream. The prophecy that comes true is remembered because the actual occurrence brings to memory the concepts in the dream, the others are forgotten.

Since our dreams are woven from the fabric of our lives, and our lives, after all, run along in fairly narrow grooves, it would be astounding if some of them did not juggle our impressions in such wise as to seem to forecast something new. The mathematical doctrine of chances alone suffices to justify the dreams that strike right. After all, one in a thousand isn't so many.

The dreams that give right answers to problems, too, are evidences not only of prophecy, but also of the existence of a sleep mind which works differently from the waking mind.

The sleep mind, which works by intuition, gains, as well as loses, by its freedom from the shackles of logic and reason. Conclusions based on reason are often utterly unsound, because we do not know all the reasons, whereas an intuitive conclusion, which is the outcome of emotion, may be inherently right.

Wherefore when a serious question awaits decision it is not a sign of indeterminateness, but an evidence of wisdom, to say, "I want to sleep on that."

Quite unconsciously we do this sometimes, believing the answer to be merely a ruse to gain time. Truly our intent is to take a change of venue, to have the point settled by the sleep mind, which is free from the shackles of prejudice and custom.—New York American.

Jordan Discusses War Supplies.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—Sir Robert Jordan, who returned to town Sunday morning, held an important conference yesterday with the Allies chasing Commission respecting purchases in Canada of supplies required by the allied Governments. He also appointments to see Lord Chamberlain and other Ministers. During his brief absence in the north of England Sir Robert visited the Hospital, the Annex Hospital, the Lady Sergeant's Hospital at Deal, where he found many wounded Canadians. At Canterbury he inspected the mounted troops under the command of Col. Patterson. The barracks which these Canadian troops occupied are those at which the Kent Buffs were stationed when they received the famous order to proceed to Canada under General Wolfe.

Operations in the Caucasus.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 24.—An official communication dealing with the operations in the Caucasus was issued Sunday by the Russian War Office. It says: "In the coastal district on the right of the 19th we destroyed a Turkish patrol, one company strong. Our patrols have crossed the River Araks, breaking through the Turkish lines. "In the direction of Olti, a Turkish attack on Mount Tchirgassar was repulsed by our fire. "Our destroyers in the Black Sea have sunk over a hundred Turkish ships."

British Hold 100 Miles.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—The Petit Parisien states that the British line in northern France and Flanders has been lengthened to more than 100 miles. Formerly it was only 40 miles long. The total number of troops actually on the firing line is 800,000.

Sir John Gibson's Son Killed.

HAMILTON, Aug. 24.—Col. Sir John M. Gibson received a cablegram yesterday announcing the death in action in Flanders on Thursday of his youngest son, Lieut. Frank Malcom Gibson. No particulars as to how he met his death were furnished. Lieut. Gibson was attached to the 1st Battalion, having left with the 1st Highlanders quota. He was killed earlier in the war, but had recovered and rejoined his regiment. John's elder son, Lieut. Colin Gibson, was also wounded in the spring, but was home on furlough for a time, and recently rejoined his regiment, the 3rd Leicesters. The late Lieut. Gibson was a graduate of the Royal Military College, Kingston, and is preparing to study law when he listed for service.

Royal Edward Avenged.

ATHENS, Aug. 29.—Allied destroyers have pursued and bottled up a German submarine in Aivali Bay. A Mitylene despatch last night said, "We believed the submarine was one that recently sank the British transport Royal Edward, with the loss of about 1,000 lives. Aivali Bay is on the Asia Minor coast, about 40 miles south of the entrance to the Dardanelles."

Furthermore, they were taken completely by surprise. How they accomplished the utter defeat of a force which must have numbered some 8,000 men, aided by the gunfire of convoying warships, and later captured the transports as well is not explained.

This account of Russian successes in the Gulf of Riga was supplied by the President of the Duma, M. V. Rodzianko, at Petrograd.

A despatch to the Central News, which is corroborated by the Times, gives the text of the announcement of the President of the Duma as follows:

"In the Riga battle the Germans lost one super-Dreadnought, the Moltke, three cruisers, and seven torpedo boats."

"The German fleet has withdrawn from Riga Bay."

"The Germans tried to make a descent near Pernpin (Hernigel, on the east shore of the Gulf of Riga, some 35 miles north of Riga?) Four barges crammed with soldiers took part in the descent. They were repulsed by the Russian troops without the co-operation of artillery, the Germans being exterminated and the barges captured."

The statement made in the Duma last night by the President of the Chamber, M. Rodzianko, that the German fleet had been defeated at Riga with the loss of the battle cruiser Moltke and three other cruisers and seven torpedo boats, elicited unbounded enthusiasm and was accompanied by touching scenes. The deputies of all factions mutually congratulated one another.

The news spread through the city and the people gathered at the newspaper offices awaiting the handing out of the official bulletin concerning the battle. The people regard the reported victory as the turning of the tide in favor of Russia.

The effect of the destruction of a German vessel of the Dreadnought class by a British submarine will, it is expected here, have a beneficial political result and tend to dissipate the cloud of discontent over the apparent inaction of the western allies.

Judgment is Suspended.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—Judgment still is suspended by the United States Government on the torpedoing of the liner Arabic, with a loss of two American lives.

Until official information on which to base the course to be pursued arrives there will be no statement of the Government's position, and high officials will not discuss the subject. Both President Wilson and Secretary of State Lansing were silent to-day, the latter dismissing interviewers with a negative answer when asked whether any additional reports had been received from Ambassador Page.

It was understood last night that the all-important report awaited before the United States determines whether Germany has committed a "deliberately unfriendly act" is expected from Ambassador Gerard at Berlin.

Italian Transports and Warships Prosecute War With Turkey.

ROME, Aug. 24.—A fleet of transports filled with Italian infantry and artillery sailed from Italy yesterday for a secret destination. They picked up anchor simultaneously at Naples, Syracuse, Taranto, and Brindisi, and steamed away under escort of numerous warships. But while the destination of this expeditionary force is not made public by the War Office, there is little doubt but that the troops are headed for the Dardanelles, there to reinforce and co-operate with the allied British-French armies and warships.

The Italian Government declared war on Turkey Saturday. The Turkish Ambassador to Rome, Naby Bey, was handed his passports, and departed immediately for Switzerland. Marchese Garroni, the Italian Ambassador to Constantinople, has been instructed to notify the Turkish Government of Italy's intention and immediately to demand his right of safe conduct from the country.

The Italian Government has sent to all its representatives abroad a circular setting forth the questions at issue between Italy and Turkey. The despatch closes with these words:

"In view of these obvious infractions of categorical promises made by the Ottoman Government and following up on our ultimatum of August 3 provoked by evasions of the Ottoman Government, particularly with regard to the free departure of Italian subjects from Asia Minor, the Italian Government has sent instructions to its Ambassador at Constantinople to declare war upon Turkey."

ULTIMATUM TO ROUMANIA?

Germany Is Believed to Have Insisted on Right to Move Munitions.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—A Reuter despatch from Sofia, Bulgaria, says:

"Private advices from Bucharest state it is feared there that Germany has sent an ultimatum to Roumania regarding the right to transport munitions of war for Turkey through Roumanian territory. The Roumanian Cabinet is firmly resolved not to grant this permission."

"A large number of cars laden with war material has been held up at Predeal, a village near the Tomos Pass, where it is reported Roumanian troops are concentrating. Troops also are massing at Jassy, about 200 miles northeast of Bucharest, and the petroleum regions have been heavily garrisoned."

SHE WAS A TRUE WIFE.

The Story of a Crisis and the Way It Was Happily Handled.

A woman has just told us of what she did the night her young husband found himself bankrupt. His factory was closed, he had lost all he owned—plus a good deal more—and, as he looked at it, life was about at an end. He reflected that he had taken his wife from a happy and charming home and that he had brought disgrace and poverty on her. It occurred to him that a well placed bullet might be the best all round solution of his difficulties.

His wife, at home, made a poignant surmise as to what he was thinking. Suddenly it occurred to her that here was a chance for team work—an opportunity to show what being a wife really meant. She prepared a delicious little dinner, she made her home as inviting as she could, and she arrayed herself in her most becoming dress.

Her husband returned, not to a disheveled and sobbing woman, to a neglected house and a drama of disaster, but to a home where everything spoke of resolution, of continuity, of expectation. The fire on his hearth, his simple, well cooked dinner, the courageous eyes of his attractive wife, restored him to a true sense of values. He was able, amid all his confusion of purpose and torment of realization, to see his failure as only a retrievable episode in his life.

He is now a successful manufacturer, his debts are paid and he has a happy home with a son and a daughter in it. He was saved from being a suicide by the fact that a woman was sportsmanlike at the right moment.—Collier's Weekly.

Had Learned One Lesson.

At one school the pupils were requested to bring 5 cents each for the piano. Donations were slow in coming and the teacher was obliged to remind the class frequently before the total was collected.

A few days later, at the physiology lesson, the teacher asked, "What are the five senses?"

To which an earnest foreigner replied, "Five centeses is for de piano."—New York Tribune.

A Pertinent Query.

BEGGARS OF CHINA

They Are an Impudent and Aggressive Set of Rogues.

BRAZEN PRANKS THEY PLAY.

Some of the High Handed Schemes They Use For the Purpose of Extorting Money From Their Victims—One Clever Method of Robbery.

Begging is in the nature of an art in China, and the various sorts of supplicants have been classified until now it is known that there are at least thirty classes of traveling mendicants who regularly go from place to place, plying their profitable vocation. The passenger boats know them only too well and do not attempt to collect passage money, for they sleep on the open deck and, curiously enough, pay for whatever rice they require. This being the case, rather than have any trouble with them and gain their enmity the boatmen allow them free passage.

When the mendicants reach the city they put up at the beggar hotel near the big pagoda and let the beggar headman know of their arrival. Soon the regular allowance is forthcoming from their victims, and the beggars spend a few days in pursuit of pleasure and then move on to another place to repeat the same proceeding.

There is one particularly obtrusive and disagreeable class trained to balance various objects on the nose, which usually selects a victim of means. These fellows may walk into a house and pick up chairs and balance them on their noses as they prance around the room. They then take these and place them just outside of the door, possibly on the street, much to the satisfaction of the large crowd which has followed them, as they have possibly just done the same thing down the street a bit. If the money is immediately forthcoming, the show may soon stop and the things will be returned to their proper places.

If, on the other hand, the residents refuse to comply with their demands, they pick up one article of furniture after another, skillfully balance each upon their noses, and, amid the roar of satisfaction from the street rabble, they carry them outside to the street. This may continue till the whole of the room's contents have been piled upon the street, and then the beggars walk off amid the bursts of applause that follow their action and leave the victim to move his belongings back into the house.

Again, there are others who are beggars pure and simple, who walk in the middle of the street, beating the pavement with a small bamboo stick. They turn neither to the right nor to the left to beg, but keep their eyes fixed ahead of them and take only what is thrown to them.

In quite another class is the wretch who shams ailment or physical defect, and who is a clever actor, willing to go to considerable physical discomfort in his efforts to arouse sympathy. He makes a practice of cutting himself when his demands are refused. He will appear before a family and demand a fee. If this is refused he draws a knife and cuts his forehead, and the blood begins to flow, much

CZAR REED'S EARLY DAYS.

His Life in the Navy and His Tribute to Its Officers.

It is not generally known that Thomas Brackett Reed served in the United States navy, but he told in a speech his own story of his naval experience, and his photograph as a young man in naval costume taken in 1864 is one of the priceless relics of the family:

"The navy means to me far different things from what it does to many here. To the distinguished admiral (Steedman) who sits beside me and to the distinguished admiral (Jenkins) who sits opposite it means the shriek of shot and shell, the horrors of the blockade. To me it meant no roaring wind, no shriek of shot and shell, but level water and the most delightful time of my life, for I was on a gunboat on the Mississippi river after the valor and courage of you gentlemen had driven the enemy off. * * * You see, I kept a grocery store for the government and well remember how I was tumbled aboard ship the first day with the provisions and small stores and a set of books, and the boat steamed up the magnificent defiles of the Tennessee. * * * But I also suffered for my country. How well I remember the fatal day when I drew $5,000 from the bank. The first time I counted the bills there was only $4,800. The next time it came out $5,200. I sweated over it in the bank that hot August day, but it never would come out two times alike. Then in utter despair I bundled it up, took it aboard, locked myself in my office and there in grim despair wrestled with it alone. And lo and behold, there was just $5,000—just what the bank clerk told me there was!

"It was a delightful life—thirteen hundred dollars a year and one ration and nothing to do. My sad heart hath often panted for it since. However, I learned that my country could support me, and I am bound to say it has faithfully done so ever since. What a charming life that was, that dear old life in the navy! I knew all the regulations, and the rest of them didn't. I had all my rights and most of theirs. * * *

"Do you wonder that I stand up for the navy? I want it increased, and I have solid reason for it. It means something to me.

"Mr. Commander and companions, I have made this speech to you in the lightest vein because I have no right to use any other. The brave faces that I see before me have been bared to the shock of battle and storm. You have seen on a hundred battlefields the living and the dead. It would be a shame for me to talk seriously of service to men like you. This button, insignia of the order, you wear because you honor it. I wear it because it honors me."—National Magazine.

A TEXAS BRONCHO

How a Preacher Bought Him and Then Broke Him.

A STRUGGLE FOR MASTERY.

The Ugly Little Brute Was Tricky and For Awhile It Seemed as Though He Would Win the Battle With the Circuit Rider, but He Didn't.

My first appointment, writes Rev. Henry E. Wing, was to a big circuit in southeastern Iowa, with headquarters in a small hamlet. As I had left my family temporarily in the east, I took a room in the village tavern. An immediate practical need was a horse to "ride the circuit."

Learning that a Mr. Williams had brought in a string of horses from the southwest, I strolled out to his ranch to take a look at them. One of them was, to me, an entirely new specimen—a Texas broncho. He was certainly not at all like the "mount" of the typical pioneer Methodist preacher and was the homeliest creature on four legs that I ever saw, with no "form" to speak of and of a color that the cleaner he was the dirtier he looked. But he was "all horse," and I took quite a fancy for him.

As soon as his owner saw that I was interested in him he was discovered to be a very choice animal that Mr. Williams had purchased as a gift for his little daughter. But I persuaded him to put a price on the colt, and he named $75. I met this with an offer of 75 cents. With this a "dicker" began, participated in by about a hundred interested spectators and ending about dusk with a deal at $16.50. So I made a partial payment to bind the bargain and sent for my old army outfit.

About a fortnight afterward, early in the morning, before many were likely to be about, with my good bridle on my arm and my trusty saddle on my shoulder, I slipped quietly out to the Williams ranch. He backed my broncho into the border of a grove of young maples. He then strapped his (the broncho's) hind fetlocks to two saplings about sixteen inches apart and tied his head with a short halter to a tree in front. Thus secured the frantic creature could neither rear nor lie down, and without much difficulty I got the bridle and saddle on.

My attention had been so engrossed in these preparations that I had not noticed the crowd that had gathered to see the "Tankee preacher" give—or, rather, make—an exhibition at "broncho busting." This was what I had tried to avoid, for, while I had perfect confidence in my ability to mount and ride the animal, I did not care to make a "swagger" of my horsemanship. But their presence now stirred my ambition to make something of a show of my proficiency.

Mr. Williams suggested that I mount and get a firm seat before he released the colt, but I declined, and as the freed horse sprang forward I leaped to his back and found the stirrups. The crowd gave a little exclamation of surprise, and then rewarded the feat with a rousing cheer. I was elated now and full of confidence. I had had all sorts of performances under me in

FAULTS IN OUR SENSES.

Defects That Enable Us to Enjoy Music and Moving Pictures.

It is a fairly well known fact that cannot hear distinct sounds that come to us at the rate of twenty or more second (it varies for different people but only slightly). The result is that we get a continuous sound or music tone. The same deficiency is evident in our sense of sight, for we cannot distinctly objects presented to our vision at the rate of more than about eight a second. For this reason only it possible to have moving pictures. For this reason also a light wave quickly appears as a streak.

The explanation of the deficiency both cases lies in the fact that it takes time for a sense perception to go to the nerve ending in the particular organ of sense (ear or eye) to the brain for we perceive only in the brain. I caused by irritation of the nerve ending, the irritation causing a wave of motion winding up at the brain. The speed has been measured and is very fast. It is about an eleventh of a second after a tall man stubs his foot before he knows it, and another eleventh passes before he can send word to the foot to be held up. If a man's arm eighty miles long and someone cut off a finger it would be an hour and three-quarters before the wave would cause pain in his brain.

Now, as a man's life consists of solely nothing else in the world these sensory and motor nerve activities, it would seem that the smaller man is the more perceptions he can have in a given time and that at the same age in years he would really much more mature than a tall man. Albe has calculated that the enormous number of such perceptions in a small human life of seventy years about ten to the eleventh power, ten thousand million.

Of course, if it was not for this called deficiency two of our most joyable entertainments would be ever annihilated—that of music whatever kind and that of moving pictures.—Chicago Herald.

AN EMPTY STOMACH.

Its Effect Upon the System and What Craves Food.

During our waking hours the stomach is rarely, if ever, completely empty and apparently there is a very physiological reason why it should be. Thus the universal custom of eating meals about five hours apart that the contents of the stomach replenished before the organ is completely emptied, is dependent upon physical need.

Since most foods are not assimilated by the system directly from the stomach, and as food remains in the stomach several hours after being swallowed, the well known fact that eating relieves fatigue almost immediately long been puzzling. But recent studies of the still mysterious action of gastric juice offer a rational explanation. When the stomach is empty digestive fluid draws directly upon blood, thus depleting the amount of nourishment necessary to the muscles and producing fatigue. But the digestive action ceases immediately when food enters the stomach; hence the feeling of refreshment that follows a meal.

The amount of fluids and salt in food also influences the action of gastric juice. When either of these nor to the left to beg, but keep their eyes fixed ahead of them and take only what is thrown to them.

In quite another class is the wretch who shams ailment or physical defect, and who is a clever actor, willing to go to considerable physical discomfort in his efforts to arouse sympathy. He makes a practice of cutting himself when his demands are refused. He will appear before a family and demand a fee. If this is refused he draws a knife and cuts his forehead, and the blood begins to flow, much to the horror and confusion of those in the house, especially if they are only women.

The sight of blood quickly changes the matter, and the beggar begins to yell in a most distressing way at the same time, attracting a crowd. It is now easy with so many witnesses to open negotiations for a much larger fee, and he is usually paid considerably more than was at first demanded.

Having carried his point, the beggar now tours the entire street, where the news of his actions has preceded him, and he finds no trouble in collecting a handsome little sum from his one cut, for the blood, still fresh on his face, strikes terror to the chicken hearted.

There is also a class of criminals who are sent into exile and sentenced to beg for a certain period of time in a province a long distance from their native places. This does away with the necessity of the government's feeding the criminal and puts him out upon public charity.

Of a very different class are the men who have a pitiful tale of starvation to tell, which, they bewail, compels them to sell their wives or sons. Few indeed would think of making a purchase of this nature, and the story almost invariably results in the bestowal of money on the "unfortunate" man. However, if he finds some one who is willing to make the bargain and take the child he is inwardly delighted, for this means a full bag for him when he finally hauls in his net.

The son goes with the new master and proves himself an unusually satisfactory lad, doing his work with his whole heart in it and thereby gaining his master's approval and entire confidence as he had planned. In due time the dutiful son slips the latch and allows his fond father to enter and secure all the goods possible, and together father and son leave with all the plunder they can possibly carry.—Argonaut.

The shortest street in Great Britain is Mansion House street, E. C., which has but one address in it and whose length is but a very few yards. I had had all sorts of performances under me in that same saddle and knew all the tricks and capers of the species.

All? All but one. Leaping out from among the trees, he lit with his four feet close together and his back in a hump, with me perched on the pinnacle. Then with a series of marvelous contortions he kept me bumping, every blow producing a concussion at the base of the brain. I kept my balance with my feet firm in the straight stirrups and my knees pressed tight against his sides. But that repeated pounding stunned me. My head began to swim, and I realized that a few more such jolts would unhorse me.

And then I prayed—just a gasp. With the breath in which that prayer was uttered the colt took a notion to run away. Apparently seized with a sudden fit of homesickness, he started for Texas, 1,000 miles away. Through the open gate and down the south road he flew, while I leaned forward on his neck and relaxed my strained muscles and regained my wind and nerve.

At last we descended, over the rim of the prairie, to a stream bordered with trees, and I turned him out into a thick clump of bushes. Then I practiced a method suggested to me years before, the same rule as for handling a boy—"first teach him that you are his master, and then show him that you are his best friend, but do not let him ever forget for a single minute that you are his master."

I dismounted and spent an hour petting and caring for the hot and discouraged creature. He was too used up at first to resent my advances had he been inclined to, and he soon seemed to realize that my intentions were friendly. I patted him and talked to him in kindly tones and led him about to browse. Finally I watered him, mounted him and rode back home. And I have always accounted this as my real debut into the "traveling connection."—New York Mail.

long been puzzling. But recent study of the still mysterious action of the gastric juice offer a rational explanation. When the stomach is empty the digestive fluid draws directly upon the blood, thus depleting the amount of nourishment necessary to the muscle and producing fatigue. But the depleting action ceases immediately when food enters the stomach; hence the feeling of refreshment that follows meal.

The amount of fluids and salt in the food also influences the action of gastric juice. When either of these is deficient in quantity the amount of gastric juice is reduced. As a result the food is not properly digested, is hurried through the stomach and is like to produce intestinal disturbance. Hard work with profuse sweating induces the fluids and salt in the body. This explains the craving of fluids at salty foods, which is experienced by persons taking prolonged muscular exercise and why it is that when the substances are lacking intestinal troubles develop.—Los Angeles Times.

A Prediction by Ouida.
Ouida, far from regarding beef feeding as a concomitant of literary success, once declared that to eat anything more than was strictly necessary was vulgar and barbaric, and, further, that to take food in public or anywhere except in entire domestic privacy was "an indelicacy which in the combi golden age of refinement we shall not dream of. ## FAULTS IN OUR SENSES.

ffects That Enable Us to Enjoy Music and Moving Pictures.

It is a fairly well known fact that we cannot hear distinct sounds that come at the rate of twenty or more a second (it varies for different people, it only slightly). The result is that we get a continuous sound or musical note. The same deficiency is evident in our sense of sight, for we cannot see distinctly objects presented to our vision at the rate of more than about eight a second. For this reason only is it possible to have moving pictures. For this reason also a light waved quickly appears as a streak.

The explanation of the deficiency in these cases lies in the fact that it takes time for a sense perception to go from the nerve ending in the particular organ of sense (ear or eye) to the brain; we perceive only in the brain. It is used by irritation of the nerve ending, the irritation causing a wave motion winding up at the brain. This wave has been measured and is not very fast. It is about an eleventh of a second after a tall man stubs his toe before he knows it, and another eleventh passes before he can send word to his foot to be held up. If a man had an arm eighty miles long and some one cut off a finger it would be an hour and three-quarters before the wave would send pain in his brain.

Now, as a man's life consists of absolutely nothing else in the world but these sensory and motor nerve activities, it would seem that the smaller a man is the more perceptions he could have in a given time and that at the same age in years he would really be much more mature than a tall man. He has calculated that the entire number of such perceptions in a normal human life of seventy years is out ten to the eleventh power, or a thousand million.

Of course, if it was not for this so called deficiency two of our most enjoyable entertainments would be forever annihilated—that of music of whatever kind and that of moving pictures.—Chicago Herald.

AN EMPTY STOMACH.

Effect Upon the System and Why It Craves Food.

During our waking hours the stomach is rarely, if ever, completely empty; apparently there is a very good physiological reason why it should not.

Thus the universal custom of taking meals about five hours apart, so that the contents of the stomach are demolished before the organ is completely emptied, is dependent upon a physiological need.

Since most foods are not assimilated by the system directly from the stomach, and as food remains in the stomach several hours after being swallowed, the well known fact that eating leaves fatigue almost immediately has been puzzling. But recent studies of the still mysterious action of the gastric juice offer a rational explanation. When the stomach is empty this gastric fluid draws directly upon the food, thus depleting the amount of nourishment necessary to the muscles in producing fatigue. But the depletion ceases immediately when food enters the stomach; hence the feeling of refreshment that follows a meal.

The amount of fluids and salt in the food also influences the action of gastric juice. When either of these is

OBEDIENCE TO GOD THE BEST EDUCATION

"The Wisdom of This World Is Foolishness With God."

Unbelief and Ignorance of God Abounding—Darkness of This World Palpable—God's People Walking In Light—Knowledge of God's Word Costly—Simple, Harmonious, Are the Scriptures.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Aug. 8.—Pastor preached in our city to-day, on the text, "Sanctify them through Thy Truth; Thy Word is Truth."—John 17:17.

The Pastor called attention to the fact that to-day the great majority of people think very little about the Word of God. Years ago it was quite customary that the Bible should have a prominent place in the colleges; for nearly every college was under the control of some denomination. This gave them a sectarian bias, however; and they were not entirely free to study Truth. But now the larger part of those graduated are total unbelievers in the Bible as the inspired Word of God. Many are ministers, who select their texts from it and who retain a certain respect for it, as for an old friend of their parents. But if closely cross-examined, probably ninety-five out of every hundred would say, "I do not believe the Bible to be the Word of God."

The colleges and the ministers have left the Bible, although the preachers select their texts from it, just as they might on other occasions quote from Shakespeare. But as for any belief in such inspiration as the Bible teaches—that "holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit," not understanding what they said—it is doubtful whether even five per cent. of the ministers believe the Bible to be God's Word. With teachers and preachers in this condition of unbelief, it is no wonder that religion is at a discount with the people. Jesus said, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith upon the earth?" The audience were witnesses that our Lord has not found much faith.—Luke 18:8; 2 Peter 1:21; 3:3-5.

"The Wise Shall Understand." Then the speaker contrasted the world's unbelief and ignorance of God with the increasing light coming to God's people. From Daniel 12:1-4 he showed that we have before us to-day unmistakable evidences that we have reached the Time of the End. Many are running to and fro in automobiles, electric trams, steam railroads, etc. Knowledge is increasing everywhere. But the deep things of God's Word are hidden from the wise and prudent, and are revealed unto babes—those not too worldly-wise. This class accept the Bible as God's Word and are guided by it.—Matthew 11:25.

In this connection the Pastor explained the parable of the Ten Virgins. (Matthew 25:1-13.) This parable pictures conditions in the Church of Christ at the end of the Gospel Age. In the Time of the

Pinkham's Vegetable Compound the praise it deserves, for I have taken it at different times and it always relieved me when other medicines failed, and when I hear a woman complain I always recommend it. Last winter I was attacked with a severe case of organic weakness. I had backache, pains in my hips and over my kidneys, headache, dizziness, lassitude, had no energy, limbs ached and I was always tired. I was hardly able to do my housework. I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound on one other occasion, and it had helped me so I took it again and it has built me up, until now I feel like a new woman. You have my hearty consent to use my name and testimonial in any way and I hope it will benefit suffering women."—Mrs. ORPHA TURNER, 431 S. Wayne St., Piqua, Ohio.

JEFFERSON'S HOME.

Monticello, With Its View of the University of Virginia.

A mansion on Monticello ("little mountain," pronounced "Montechello"), was Jefferson's boyhood dream. He worked at it all his life with an artist's creative zeal.

The road from Charlottesville is winding, hilly and rough. Rows of big stepping stones cross it, lifting pedestrians out of the red mud, but jolting heedless drivers.

Visitors may stay in the grounds twenty minutes, but must bring no luncheons. Jefferson's guests stayed weeks and ate him into poverty.

From the servant's quarters a long sunken way runs under the house to the ice house and other storage beyond. The flat roof of this walk, two feet above ground, is a dry promenade. Over the icehouse is an outlook platform. Icehouse and servants' quarters are half underground, with windows only on the far side. Jefferson looked out over them east toward Washington, west toward the University of Virginia, whose beginnings he watched with his telescope when he could no longer walk.

Students enjoy the most beautiful and inspiring scholastic shades in the new world. Jefferson's university is

If the still mysterious action of the gastric juice offer a rational explanation. When the stomach is empty this digestive fluid draws directly upon the blood, thus depleting the amount of nourishment necessary to the muscles and producing fatigue. But the depleting action ceases immediately when food enters the stomach; hence the feeling of refreshment that follows a meal.

The amount of fluids and salt in the food also influences the action of gastric juice. When either of these is deficient in quantity the amount of gastric juice is reduced. As a result the food is not properly digested, is hurried through the stomach and is likely to produce intestinal disturbances. Hard work with profuse sweating reduces the fluids and salt in the body. This explains the craving of fluids and salty foods, which is experienced by persons taking prolonged muscular exercise and why it is that when these substances are lacking intestinal troubles develop.—Los Angeles Times.

A Prediction by Ouida.

Ouida, far from regarding heavy feeding as a concomitant of literary success, once declared that to eat anything more than was strictly necessary was vulgar and barbaric, and, further, but to take food in public or anywhere except in entire domestic privacy was an indelicacy which in the coming olden age of refinement we shall not dream of. "We shall then," she said, "no more think of indulging bodily needs in the presence of others than of cleaning our teeth or washing our hair in the public view." And then will be the end of the "restaurant" habit.—Pearson's Weekly.

Hard Labor.

A definition of hard labor appears in the decision of the court in People versus Hanrahan, 75 Mich., 621, as follows: "Hard labor in itself is not infamous or degrading. On the contrary, it is nobling and is the foundation upon which reposes all true progress in mental and moral development. 'The infamy and degradation consist in its being involuntary.'—New York in.

Odd lots of choice steers sold at $8.75 to $9 and good at $8.25 to $8.50 per cwt., but the bulk of the trading was done in cattle ranging from $6.75 to $7.75.

Owing to the steady increases in the receipts of sheep and lambs for the past few weeks and the liberal supplies, the weak feeling continues, prices today scoring a further decline of 25c to 50c per cwt. There was an active demand from both butchers and packers, for lambs and a brisk trade was done in Ontario stock at $8 to $8.50 and Quebec at $7.50 to $7.75. End. Many are running to and fro in automobiles, electric trams, steam railroads, etc. Knowledge is increasing everywhere. But the deep things of God's Word are hidden from the wise and prudent, and are revealed unto babes—those not too worldly-wise. This class accept the Bible as God's Word and are guided by it.—Matthew 11:25.

In this connection the Pastor explained the parable of the Ten Virgins. (Matthew 25:1-13.) This parable pictures conditions in the Church of Christ at the end of the Gospel Age. In the Time of the End the cry went forth, "The Bridegroom cometh!" All justified believers made ready to meet Him. But He tarried; and all the virgins slumbered and slept, not knowing what to make of the delay. Again the cry went forth, "Behold the Bridegroom!" He is here. Again all the virgins awakened. The wise virgins trimmed their Lamps, saw the Truth, and were ready to follow the Bridegroom into the marriage.—Psalm 119:105.

But the foolish virgins had no oil, no light. The oil represents the Holy Spirit and the enlightenment coming therefrom. The foolish virgins go to buy when they give time for investigation—time taken from business, pleasure and worldly affairs. Those who do not find time for study do not wish to have the light. Although true Christians, they will not pay the price. Whoever is rejoicing in the light of Present Truth will testify that it has cost him something of worldly influence, time, attention and thought.

The Church Called, Not Compelled.

God is not seeking to deceive people or to force them into the Kingdom. During this Gospel Age He has merely sent forth His Message to gather out those who wish to respond—no force, no compulsion, merely His Word. (Acts 15:13-18.) We heard the call; our hearts responded, and we came back into harmony with God. His Word informed us that He had made all arrangements for covering our sins, through the death of our Lord Jesus Christ; and that He was willing to receive us into His family and make us His heirs, joint-heirs with our Lord Jesus.—Romans 8:17.

God's Word is Truth—not truth on every subject, but on the most important ones. The most important truth is that which God purposes to teach all His intelligent creatures—that obedience to Him is the best education. All other learning will prove valueless, perhaps injurious, unless associated with obedience to God. The majority of professed Christians are under the delusions of the present evil world. They are outside, like the remainder of mankind. But the true Christian has that which is satisfactory. Therefore he is contented to let God shape his affairs.

BAHAMA ISLAND SHELLS.

Pearly Treasures of Many Varieties
Line the Beaches.

The shores of the Bahama Islands are each day strewn with multitudes of beautiful seashells, more than fifty varieties of which have a commercial value in the United States and Europe.

Among these are rice shells, so tiny in size as to make one marvel how a sufficient number could be picked up to fill a barrel; gold shells, mud shells, cockles, bleeding tooth; pretty decorative sun shells, eardrop shells, which are exported to Odessa, Russia, to be used as ear pendants; Panama or tent shells, which resemble miniature encampments and sell at $90 a barrel; black snails, which take a high polish; conchs—king, queen, ivory, pinklip and trochus or Turk's cap, locally termed "whelks." These are but a few of the assortment kept in stock at the leading warehouses at Nassau.

The queen conch, which is especially adapted for cameo carving on account of having a layer of brown with a white top and the pinklip conch, which has layers of white and pink, are much sought for. Only the lips of these two varieties are exported, the demand coming from New York and from Torre del Greco, near Naples, Italy.

Ordinary conchs sell at 1 cent; pinklip, whole shells, from 5 cents to 25 cents, and queens at 30 cents United States currency in Nassau. The whelk or Turk's cap is particularly valuable, as it has a portion resembling the best mother-of-pearl, from which pearl studs, for instance, could be made.

It is estimated that a million shells of this variety could be obtained annually in this colony. These shells sell for 1½ cents each. Labor is cheap, colored women receiving from 25 to 30 cents, ordinary laboring men 60 cents and white engineers $1.50 a day.—Indianapolis News.

GERMANY SEES FINANCIAL RUIN

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 23.—At the secret conference of cabinet ministers, political leaders and influential writers, called by the German Imperial Chancellor before the reassembling of the reichstag last Thursday, to discuss the political situation. The Telegraaf says that Karl Hefferich, secretary of the treasury, explained that the new German war loan would completely exhaust the empire's financial resources, and that the increase in exchequer bonds would cause a bankruptcy. Therefore, Dr. Hefferich urged, it was needful to prepare for an honorable peace.

Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg, according to the same report, declared that the difficulties of the empire were increasing, and advised his hearers to use their influence to soften down bellicose inclinations and expansion policy in the reichstag and the country, and carefully to prepare peace proposals which would be acceptable to the four members of the entente.

DERNBURG'S FAILURE.

Dr. Bernhard Dernburg's report of the failure of his mission to the United States and other neutral countries, The Telegraaf says, made a strong impression on the conference.

General Von Moltke, former chief of the general staff, declared that he fully agreed with the chancellor, and added that only those not fully informed on the situation could hope for the possibility of complete Russian defeat.

Despite these declarations, the story concludes, the meeting refused to adopt a resolution advocating moderation in the reichstag, whereupon the chancellor declared that if a majority in the reichstag should show an irrevocable attitude he would be obliged to resign, as he could not accept responsibility for Germany's disaster.

THREE MILLION GERMANS ARE KEPT ON FIRING LINE.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—7.35 p.m.—A German statement from an authoritative "British source" on Germany's strength in men and her losses was made public here to-day. The statement asserts that about July 31 the Germans had 1,900,000 men on the western battlefield and 1,400,000 on the eastern front—a total of 3,200,000 men on the actual fighting line—while there also were 1,120,000 Austrians opposed to the Russians. There were besides a large number of German troops of various classes in garrisons, fortifications and on lines of communication in addition to convalescents, invalids and others.

"It is impossible to say," the statement declares, "how far the reserve troops have been armed and equipped, but the fact that the total number of men on the two fronts is only 3,200,000 appears to show that this is about the largest number the Germans are able to put fully equipped into the firing line."

NOT HARDENED VETERANS.

"The Germans from a date shortly after the outbreak of the war supplied the losses in their first line and reserve troops from the second and even the third line, so that it is safe to regard all the German troops

TOWN COUNCIL.

Council Chamber

Aug. 23rd, 1915

Council met in special session Monday evening, Mayor W. T. Gibbard presiding.

Mr. W. A. Grange, clerk, informed the council that Mr. John N. Osborn had been elected to fill the unexpired term of the late Coun. F. H. Carson and having made the proper declarations had taken his seat at the Board.

Present—Reeve Denison, and Councillors Walters, Wiseman, Osborn, Dickinson and Graham.

The minutes of the last regular meeting were read and confirmed.

A communication was read from Mr. Chas. Phillips, Manufacturers' Agent Toronto, seeking information as to what inducements the town would offer for the establishment of a glove and glove silk underwear factory in Napanee. The pay sheet for this concern would be between $8 and $1000 per week, of which 40 per cent. would be paid to men, and 60 per cent. to women and girls. A factory 40 or 50 feet wide by 100 feet deep, and two stories high, would be required.

The clerk was instructed to answer the communication setting forth the advantages of Napanee, and giving the particulars asked for.

A communication was read from John G. Fennel asking to be appointed tax collector for the year 1915.

Mrs. E. J. Harrison and others petitioned the council for a cement walk on the west side of Union street, between Frederick and Front streets, to be constructed under the Local Improvement plan.

Referred back to the petitioners not being properly signed.

E. S. Lapum, Mrs. (S. Howard), and others petitioned the council for a cement walk on the south side of Union street, between Robinson and Rich streets.

No action taken as the council had more walks to build already this year than it can handle.

The Streets Committee reported that Mrs. Chapman had proceeded with the completed erection of a fence in front of her property, in face of objection raised by the town.

Coun. Walters reported having the town well pumped out and thoroughly cleansed.

A by-law respecting the payment of taxes was passed. The by-law provides that all taxes are due and payable on August 1st, 1915; all taxes are payable at par up to November 1st; a per centage charge of 2 per cent. shall be added after Nov. 1 and an additional per centage charge of 3 per cent. shall be added to taxes remaining unpaid after Dec. 1.

Mayor Gibbard asked for and was granted permission to use the chair in the town hall for the patriotic meeting in the armouries on September 2nd.

On motion of Coun. Wiseman and Reeve Denison the clerk was instructed to draft a resolution of condolence and after having it signed by all the members of the council, forward the same to the widow of the late Coun. F. H. Carson.

Moved by Councillors Graham and Walters that the Collector be allowed to return his roll, with the uncollected taxes as they appear on that day upon the roll. Carried.

On motion of Councillors Graham and Walters the application of Mr. G. Fennel for the position of tax collector for the year 1915 was accepted. The salary of the tax collector $200, an allowance of $10 for postage, and the payment of the cost of troops have been armed and equipped, but the fact that the total number of men on the two fronts is only 3,200,000 appears to show that this is about the largest number the Germans are able to put fully equipped into the firing line.

NOT HARDENED VETERANS.

"The Germans from a date shortly after the outbreak of the war supplied the losses in their first line and reserve troops from the second and even the third line, so that it is safer to regard all the German troops in the fighting line as much of the same quality as in the first few months of the war.

"It is calculated that the first line troops lost about 50 per cent. in casualties, and the reserves about 25 per cent., their places being taken by recruits from the 1914 class and from other categories and reformed units, including the 1915 class of recruits.

"Since then they have again lost about 50 per cent. in casualties, so probably there remains only about 25 per cent. of the original first line troops, to which must be added the men slightly wounded, who have returned to the fighting line.

"The German casualties in killed, wounded and missing reported to June 30, totaled 2,672,444 men, of whom 306,123 were killed. 15,808 died of disease, and 540,723 either are missing or prisoners, or so seriously wounded as to put them out of action for the remainder of the war. Since June 30, there has been heavy fighting, probably bringing the total loss up to 2,000,000 for the year.

LOSSES 1,500,000.

"Assuming that half a million men were only slightly wounded and recovered the effective loss is assumed to amount to 1,000,000 in addition to which probably half a million men are wounded, who are absent from the front on leave in hospitals. This makes the total net loss for the year 1,500,000, of which from 400,000 to 450,000 men were killed.

"The Germans it is calculated, at the beginning of the war had 8,000,000 men available for military service, and that number might be increased by a million and a half if every man of military age gave his service. The only reasonable suggestion, therefore, for the fact that the Germans have only 3,200,000 men in the fighting line is that they are unable to supply more than that number with equipment. From the total of from 8,000,000 to 9,000,000 men must be deducted the 1,500,000 net loss for the year and the same number of men required for making arms and ammunition."

DESERONTO.

The remains of the late D. R. Jones, Donald, Ont., were met at Marysville by Undertaker I. Allum and friend on Tuesday, and taken to St. Mark church. Mr. Jones was former superintendent of Chemical Works and Deseronto Iron Works while resided here. He is survived by a widow and one daughter, Mrs. Kenneth Brown, Napanee Road. His death came as a shock to his relatives and friends here. Blood poisoning and heart failure was the cause. The funeral was largely attended throughout from St. Mark's church Deseronto cemetery.

On Sunday afternoon the funeral Mrs. John Tait, aged ninety-six years, was held from the residence of her son, John Tait, with whom she made her home since the death of her husband fifty-five years ago, to St. Mark church, and thence to Deseronto cemetery. She is survived by two sons and one daughter.

SMALL KINDNESS APPRECIATED.

The following received from Mr. R. G. Travers indicates the manner in which any little kindness shown to our soldier heroes is appreciated by them. A short time ago Mr. F. W. Barrett took a snap shot picture of Mr. Travers dog "Friend" and sent it over to Mr. Travers in England. The following letter is the reply.

Shorncliffe, Aug. 6th,
My Dear Barrett.

It was indeed kind of you to send me that picture of "Friend," and I cannot tell you how much I appreciated your thought of me. I handed it around to all the Napanee boys, and it tickled them immensely. A little touch of old Napanee, which went to all our hearts. Life goes on here as it does in all military camps. Reveille at 5.30 and a good steady grind until 5 p.m. We march to Lydd, twenty miles, next Sunday for a two weeks' course in musketry. There are no better men in the battalion than the boys we recruited at Napanee, and it will not be long before they will be given a chance to prove what good Britishers they really are.

Again thanking you for the picture and for your good wishes.

Yours very truly
R. G. H. TRAVERS.

WORDS OF APPRECIATION.

Barriefield Camp, Kingston,
Aug. 19th, 1915.

To The Editor

Napanee Express.
Dear Sir:—The Highland Pipe Band of the 8th Mounted Rifles, wish to thank the people of Napanee for the very cordial and kindly reception accorded them on the occasions of their recent visits to Napanee; and especially does the band appreciate the good offices of Chief Graham, who by his kindness and tact has won a very warm place in the hearts of the bandmen.

On the occasion of the return visit of the regiment on Monday, Chief Graham met the band at the station, and up to the moment of its departure on the following day, everything possible was done to make the visit of the Highland Band a successful and a happy one for all concerned.

Another feature of the visit which will live long in the memory of the bandmen was the hospitality of Mr. W. S. Herrington K.C., and his daughter, Mrs. Sneath, who entertained the band to afternoon tea at their residence on Monday afternoon, and who apparently acted on the belief that nothing was too good for the soldiers.

Special thanks is also due to Dr. Wagar, who after rendering professional service to one of the pipers, refused to accept any payment.

Signed on behalf of the Highland Pipe Band of the 8th M. R.

JAS. HOWDEN,—Acting pipe-major.

Victorias 12-Maple Leafs 7.

Did you witness the biggest base ball match ever held in Napanee, on Friday last? Well, if not, you certainly missed SOME game.

In quite the event of the season the Victorias' took the Maple Leafs' into camp by the score of 12-7, on Friday evening last, at the Napanee Driving Park. The game was a benefit game for the Red Cross and the neat sum of $45.00 was realized by the efforts of the players.

The game was a good exhibition of the great national pasttime and the Old Boys certainly showed they are not in the "has been" "never was," or "ain't any good" class, yet by a long way. To see the old timers cavorting around the bases was wonderful. The star base runners, "Dan" Hogan, and "Pat" Gleeson, pilfered bases in easy manner, and "Ty" Cobb was slow compared to those gents. "Doc" Leonard stole third base by a great slide, and the umpire called the player safe, on account of the cloud of dust. The pitchers, Derry for the Vics, and Pringle for the Leafs, pitched good games, and both fielded their position splendidly. Derry had a little the better of the argument. He caused "Wild Bill" Dunlop and "Porky" Savage to whiff the air in vain attempts for home run drives. Dick McNeil made the catch of the day in centre field, robbing "Dewey" McLughlin of a sure three begger. "Silent" Rikley, at third base, was not rugh good until he changed his glove. The one he was using had a big hole in it and caused him to lose the ball several times. However, "Silent" redeemed himself at short by two pretty catches in the diving stages of the game. "Nick" Vanalstine, at 3rd for Vics, was great, and he ran bases like a rabbit. "Wild Bill" Dunlop and "Nick" collided at 3rd in the 8th innings, and the crash could be heard for blocks.

Home Run Haggerty again struck out with the bases filled much to the chagrin of "Torch" Daly, the Vics Captain. "Torch" carried off the bat- ting honors, getting a safety every time up.

Pringle was knocked out of the box and Bert Weese took up the task, but the Vics took kindly to his offerings as well. "Geo" Curran played short for the losers. "Gat" Taylor wielded the willow with tiling effect, but they resulted in pop flies, that were gobbled up by Jack Derry in finished style. Clatie Maybee was also there in the pinches. Mr. William Maybee was official umpire, but Bill seemed affected in his left optic. It was rumored that the Vics bought him off, and the sum was large. The local automobile dealers are hot on the trail, Mayor Gibbard pitched the first ball. Only a fair crowd was present, but those that stayed at home missed it. Line up as follows :

Maple Leafs—G. Savage, c., J. Pringle, p., H. Dunlop, 1st b., B Weese, 2nd b., F. Rikley, 3rd b., G. B. Curran, s.s., G. Taylor, r.f., D. McNeil, l.f., H. Schmerhorn, c.f.

Another similar game will be played in the near future by the Old Boys, and it is expected to realize another $50.00. If this sum is realized, the "sports" of this town will have contributed $200.00 to the worthy fund. Full particulars will be announced later. Besure and keep posted.

DISABLED BRITISH SUB- MARINE WAS FIRED UPON BY GERMANS

LONDON, Aug. 22.—The story of the sinking of the British submarine E13 was told in an announcement from the admiralty Friday as follows: "A report has been received from Lieut. Commander Layton, commanding the E13, whose grounding on the Danish Island of Saltholm was published yesterday. The lieutenant commander reports that the submarine grounded in the early morning of Aug. 19. All efforts to refloat her failed.

"At 5 o'clock a Danish torpedo boat appeared on the scene, and informed the E13 that she would be allowed 24 hours to get off. At the same time a German torpedo boat arrived and remained close to the submarine until two more Danish torpedo boats came up, when she withdrew.

"At 9 o'clock, while the three Danish torpedo boats were anchored close to the submarine, two German torpedo boats approached from the south. When about a half a mile away one of these hoisted a commercial flag signal, but before the commanding officer of the E13 had time to read it the German destroyer fired a torpedo at her from a distance of about 300 yards. The torpedo exploded on hitting the bottom close to her.

"At the same moment the German destroyer fired with all her guns and Lieut. Commander Layton seeing that his submarine was on fire fore and aft was unable to defend herself owing to her being aground, gave orders for the crew to abandon her. While the men were in the water they were fired upon by machine guns and with shrapnel.

"One of the Danish torpedo boats immediately lowered her boat and steamed between the submarine and the German destroyers, who therefore had to cease fire and withdraw."

The Red Cross Society

The Society acknowledges with thanks, a donation of $15, being the proceeds of a lawn social, given by the ladies of Pleasant Valley.

The committee, in charge of the ball game, held recently in the Driving Park, wish to thank the gentlemen, who were kind enough to give their services in aid of the Red Cross work. A neat sum, which will add materially to the funds of the Society, has been realized in this way.

Further donations of fruit and jam are still being asked for. As the box is to be shipped on September 10th, it would facilitate matters, if donations could be sent in, as early as possible. The fruit may be left at Mr. Kelly's grocery store during the week, and on Saturday, at the Red Cross rooms. These little gifts cannot mean much to the individual, but will, we trust, add considerably to the comfort of our soldiers.

The Society proposes having "But-ton Day" on September 2nd when Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Hon. Geo. E. Foster, and other prominent speakers will be in town.

A splendid work-meeting will be held Saturday afternoon and ice cream will be served. The room will be open as usual Saturday morning.

All young men in the County should hear Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Geo. E. Foster, on Sept. 2nd.

AUTUMN SOWN CROPS.

Results of Experiments conducted at the Ontario Agricultural College and on various Ontario Farms in 1915.

About two hundred and eighty-five varieties of winter wheat and a large number of selections and crosses have been grown under experiment at the Agricultural College within the past twenty-six years. Nearly all the varieties have been carefully tested in each of five years, after which the inferior kinds have been discarded and those which have given the best results have been continued in the experiments. Within the past year forty varieties, fourteen hybrids, and a number of straight selections were grown under test. Of the named varieties fourteen have been grown in each of twenty years; and the results of these are of particular value. The average results for the twenty year period show that the following varieties gave the highest average yields of grain per acre: Dawson's Golden Chaff, 51.4 bushels; Imperial Amber, 46.9 bushels; Early Genesee Giant, 47.1 bushels; Egyptian Amber, 46.9 bushels; Early Red Clawson, 46.6 bushels; and Rudy, 45.8 bushels. In comparison with these yields the Turkey Red gave an average of 43.7 bushels, and the old Treadwell variety 42.4 bushels per acre.

From enquiries made, throughout Ontario during the past year it was evident that the Dawson's Golden Chaff is still the most extensively grown variety of winter wheat in Ontario. Seventy per cent. Of the answers mentioned Dawson's Golden Chaff as the most extensively grown variety in the different countries. This variety, in the results at Guelph for twenty years, has given an average of practically three bushels per acre more than any other variety grown under similar conditions. The Dawson's Golden Chaff was originated in Ontario thirty-four years ago. It produces a very stiff straw of medium length, beardless heads with red chaff, and white grain which weighs slightly over the standard per measured bushel. There seems to be evidence that the Dawson's Golden Chaff is improving somewhat in quality for bread production. Farmers' Bulletin No. 616 of the United States Department of Agriculture states that the Dawson's Golden Chaff is probably the leading variety of soft white winter wheat in the North Central and the North Atlantic States. It also refers to this wheat as follows: "This variety stands up well in the field and is above the average in winter resistance. The grains are somewhat harder than those of most other white wheats. In several milling and baking tests that have been made it has given a good yield of flour, rather low in total protein content, but containing gluten of excellent quality." The Imperial Amber variety produces a large amount of straw which is medium in strength, a bearded head with red chaff and a red grain of very good quality.

In the experiments conducted at the College in 1915 the winter wheat gave an average yield of grain of 13.5 bushels per acre over the average of the past twenty years. The straw was somewhat heavier, but the grain weighed one-half pound per measured bushel less than the average.

For nine years in succession experiments were conducted in treating winter wheat in different ways to prevent the development of stinking smut and the results have been very satisfactory. In the average for five years, untreated seed produced 4.2 per cent. of smutted heads, while seeds which

Lady Jellicoe acknowledges with her most grateful thanks the lovely parcel of shirts, socks, scarves, helmets, mittens, etc., sent for the men of the North Sea Fleet.

The Committee has very great pleasure in acknowledging with very sincere thanks the beautiful contribution of ten (10) hospital pillows with cases from Mrs. Davern, Thomas street, Napanee, who also sent in a handsome donation to our funds two weeks since.

Notice is hereby given, that owing to a patriotic demonstration and recruiting meeting to be held in the town on Thursday, 2nd September, our regular weekly work-meeting will be held for next week, on Wednesday 1st September. It is hoped that all will note the change of day, and that as many as possible will be present, as there are items of importance to be gone over. Bring your friends and come to our room, also on Saturdays, where work is always going on, and a welcome awaits you.

The room on both days remains open until 5.30 p.m.

College in 1915 the winter wheat gave an average yield of grain of 13.5 bushels per acre over the average of the past twenty years. The straw was somewhat heavier, but the grain weighed one-half pound per measured bushel less than the average.

For nine years in succession experiments were conducted in treating winter wheat in different ways to prevent the development of stinking smut and the results have been very satisfactory. In the average for five years, untreated seed produced 4.2 per cent. of smutted heads, while seeds which was immersed for twenty minutes in a solution made by adding one pint of formalin to forty-two gallons of water, produced a crop which was practically free from smut. A material called Corvusine, claimed to have been made in England, and sold in Montreal, has been rather extensively advertised for the prevention of smut. We treated winter wheat last autumn and oats and barley this spring, but in every case the germination of the greater part of the seed treated with Corvusine was destroyed and the crop produced was very small. The following quotation is taken from the booklet advertising Corvusine: "All chemicals used in this preparation are so treated as to prevent injury to the germinative power of the grain." This statement seems inconsistent with our results.

Owing to excessive rains this season a considerable amount of winter wheat throughout Ontario became sprouted before it could be harvested. Information regarding the value of sprouted wheat for seed purposes is important. In each of two years when winter wheat was sprouted in the fields, germination tests of the grain were made. The following results show the average percentages of germination from each selection: skin over germ, unbroken, 94; skin over germ, broken, 76; sprouts one-quarter inch long, 30; and sprouts one inch long, 18. Not only were the sprouted seeds low in germination but the plants produced were very uneven in size.

RESULTS OF CO-OPERATIVE EXPERIMENTS.

Three hundred and eighty-eight farmers throughout Ontario conducted experiments with autumn sown crops during the past year. Reports have been received from thirty-seven countries and districts throughout Ontario. Those sending the greatest number of reports were Nipissing, Simco, Ontario, Hastings, Huron, and Parry Sound. The greatest number of good reports were furnished by Simcoe, Ontario, Welland, Lambton, and Haliburton.

Five varieties of wheat were distributed last autumn to those farmers who wished to test some of the leading varieties on their own farms. The average results of the carefully conducted co-operative experiments with these five varieties showed the following yields per acre Imperial Amber, 35.8 bushels; American Banner, 32.5 bushels; and Yaroslaf 28.8 bushels.

In another co-operative experiment the Peckus winter rye surpassed the Imperial Amber winter wheat by an average of 380 pounds per acre.

The co-operative experiments with hairy vetches and winter rye for fodder production showed that the yields in tons of green crop per acre were as follows: hairy vetches 11.1 in 1915, and 11.4 in the average of four years.

All seed will be sent by mail except that for Number Four which will accompany the fertilizers.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN VANCOUVER.

A significant sign of the rising of public opinion in British Columbia against the liquor traffic is to be found in a statement issued by John Neill, Publisher of the Vancouver News (Independent), in which he announces that his paper will undertake a finite campaign against the traffic. "British Columbia," the statement begins, "is shortly to be a to prohibit the liquor traffic during the war. A convention held in this city in a few days a campaign will then be outlined plans for its prosecution made."

The present movement sprang from causes, classes and interests which in the main have not hitherto been identified with temperance reform. One has only to move about the business community of this and the province to be convinced that comprehensive is the extent of present sentiment. Undoubtedly, war, responsible for many disillusionments, accounts for the present conditions.

The present campaign will be economic one. Throughout the province it is being fathered by school keepers, minors, professional mill hands, lumbermen, farmers business men of all kinds.

The candid opinion of most sensible men to-day is unmistakably in direction, namely, that no country that is at war has any business permitting the continuance of a traffic which imposes unnecessary burdens on industry and commerce and entitles worse ravages than war itself.

The Battle of Langemarck

By T. A. Browne, Immigration Branch.

The battle of Langemarck, where the Canadians saved the day and gained unfading glory, is the theme round which Mr. Browne has written this splendid poem, accurate in incident and action of that historic struggle. It is a fitting tribute to a glorious landmark in the history of Canadian patriotism.

When men shall say who saved the day in years that are to be;
When veterans back from war's grim track again abide with me;
When peace regains her throne and reigns and silent are the guns,
I'll think with pride of those who died and say "they were my sons."

I sent them from their peaceful tasks, those strong young sons of mine;
I saw them swinging down the street, I saw them stand in line.
My unbrazed of the counting-house, my sun-tanned from the farms,
I sent them forth sons of the North, my gallant men at arms.

With summer's fading rose they went, I well recall the day;
The gold was on the maple leaf, the birds were on the spray,
And through the long white winter time I waited for the spring,
For word to tell me how they served their country and their King.

And then I heard the tolling bells and saw the flags half-mast.
Why should I weep in springtime with the long, white winter past?
And why are all the people stirred and what is it they say?
My boys have dared, have fought and shared the glory of the fray.

Across the sea, afar from me, they've met the dreaded Huns
At Langemarck, in Flanders, my gallant Northern sons.
Near Ypres, in the lowlands, three thousand miles away,
Across the wave, my children brave have died—but saved the day.

In grim array that April day, entrenched the Allies lay,
To bar the path of Prussian wrath that fumed to reach Calais;
And Ypres town, half battered down, they'd sought with longing eyes,
And they had sworn that very morn to take it as a prize.

And breathing there the battle air beneath the warm sunshine
From Peschendelle to Polcopelle Canadians held the line;
Then, sudden as the avalanche that rips the mountain side,
The battle broke and through the smoke they met the German tide.

They watched the fume-filled cloudbank rise and spread its stifling rack;
They saw the Belgian veterans and gallant French fell back;
They heard them cry, they saw them fly as men by fiends pursued;
They heard them shout, they saw the rout before that cloud, hell-brewed.

In such a plight as veterans might have blanched before and failed,
They stood uncowed with spirits proud and hearts that never quailed.
Surprised, amazed, a moment dazed, in that tremendous hour,
Like living rocks they met the shocks of mad Germanic power.

They saw the wide breach wider grow, when men in terror fled;
They saw the eager foe leap on o'er the dying and the dead;
And by that foe and through that gap they saw an Empire fall;
Then, in the breach, to front the foe, they threw their living wall.

They threw their living breasts between to stem the German tide,
My volunteers of Canada—they fought as veterans tried.
They fought the boast of Wilhelm's host; they met them hand to hand,
My young men of the counting-house, my plough-boys from the land.

They came from ranches of the West, where plain and mountain call,
From down east way, by Quinty's Bay, from Don and Montreal;
Their feet had known the sea-walled street, where ocean mists hang gray,
And one to four, though stricken sore, they kept the foe at bay.

The air rained death by bomb and dart, the earth belched death below
By shining blade and hand grenade and death by poison slow;
Three days of hell, with shot and shell, they fought 'neath moon and sun
The Belgian plain was strewn with slain, Canadian and Hun.

Ye troubadours—that sing of wars and brave deeds handed down,
When you will sing how for the King they strove near Ypres town,
Tell how they fought and nobly wrought like Paladins of old;
Tell how my sons retook the guns and won their spurs of gold.

And you will tell how Birchall fell as calm as on parade,
How on they bore amid the road in that wild charge they made,
Where Julien's wood in moonlight stood when midnight met the morn,
Tell how they died, my brave, my pride, on that field battle torn.

They went not forth for gain or gold, 'twas not for such they died.
They fought for right, 'gainst armed might that covenants defied.
Pure was their quest, to serve the best their banner they unfurled
For that high plan, the rights of man, the freedom of the world.

The feet that press'd my ample breast, the eyes that loved my pines
Will know no more my welcome shore, but still their glory shines.
Sing troubadour, let thy notes soar, sing with a voice divine,
Of how they saved the day and braved the despot of the Rhine.

to within striking distance of each other, and both feverishly began preparation respectively to effect and oppose further advance.

Here and there little battles were fought. Bodies of Turks would sometimes rush out in an endeavor to obtain more terrain for construction of their line. The British soldiers would drop their entrenching tools and wipe out the attackers in silence with their bayonets. Then again our men, leaving behind spades and axes and wire cutters, would seize their rifles and advance cautiously to annihilate some group of the enemy and then would return to work on their own grounds.

FOE'S STRENGTH 700,000

During darkness, it is estimated the Turks brought up no fewer than 700,000, and with the morning light the second morning's terrific battle began.

The scene of this battle was beyond the effective help from the ships, but a strong force of artillery had been landed and placed in position. The Turks threw strong bodies of troops against several points of our new line, but they were driven back, and then the British replied with counter attacks.

The heat during the day was great and the utmost determination and high courage was called for. But never for a moment did the British belie their splendid reputation. Often their only protection was a stunted bush or smaller boulder, and here and there were small groups of men lying dead, with mounds of used cartridges beside them.

It was costly work, especially for the Turks, despite their numerical superiority and the advantage they had by holding higher ground. All day long the two lines turned and twisted and turned again, but neither broke.

Our artillery did magnificent work. The machine guns were particularly deadly. The sandy ravines, scantily covered with stunted grass, were often quickly transformed into veritable fortresses which were raked and raked with ferocious fire and taken and retaken with stupendous courage.

AT CLOSE QUARTERS.

The Turks in massed formation on alert for more work. This consisted of a heavy attack on the enemy's left flank, by which they were routed in disorder, and with exceptionally severe losses.

JUNCTION EFFECTED.

Meanwhile during the whole course of these operations the Australians and New Zealanders, to the south, had been heavily engaged, and the attack on the Suvla forces on the right and the Anzac forces on the left were so successful that a junction was effected, bringing into being a 12-mile continuous battle line.

Thru this line passes one of the main routes for the supply of the Turkish forces now facing the allies' forces in the south of the peninsula. The communication of the Turks, therefore, is seriously threatened. The only other road to the east is an inferior artery of supply, and even this is now under fire of the artillery and our new line, which can also sweep the Bokali and Gereva valleys, stretching away east and south from the middle of the peninsula inland from Suvla and Anzac to the Dardanelles near Niagara and the Narrows.

TURKS' HUGE LOSSES.

The Turks' who fought with the utmost gallantry, lost at least 27,000 men dead, four times as many as our own losses. The way in which the Turkish forces were rushed to the spot, and the nature of the mountainous country in front of our position augurs further stiff fighting before we can throw a line astride of the peninsula—a line which would cut off the southern Turkish army altogether.

Whether the army can be bottled up so, or whether they will avoid it by retreat, remains to be seen. But in any event an important step has been taken in the long and costly struggle on the peninsula.

A significant sign of the rising tide public opinion in British Columbia gainst the liquor traffic is to be found a statement issued by John Nelson, ublisher of the Vancouver World, (ndependent), in which he announces at his paper will undertake a de- nite campaign against the traffic. ## ENEMY GIVEN BIG SURPRISE AT SUVLA BAY

ATHENS, Aug. 22.—Details which I have been able to obtain here show that in the latter operations on the Gallipoli peninsula, the landing at Suvla Bay was some of the most brilliant pieces of work yet carried thru during the war. The battle which followed the successful disembarkation of troops was one of the most stubborn and sanguinary of Hellespont and Constantinople.

The chief point about the latest achievement is that it was a complete and staggering surprise. The Turks had anticipated a new attack on the Asiatic side, and they had been feverishly fortifying the coast line as far south as Point Baba. Demonstrations made by us had strengthened their belief in our intention to attack on that side.

TURKS HOODWINKED.

Never before in military operations has any enemy been so completely hoodwinked. The utmost secrecy as to the allies' plan was preserved, the various units composing the landing force departing from their several bases each unknown to the other. That dark night scene on Suvla Bay may be better imagined than described. Every description of ship was there, half-full with soldiers. They composed the largest force ever yet thrown from the sea directly into a hostile country.

The navy took charge of the land- ing, and hardly had the anchors found resting place in the sandy sea bottom than hundreds of small boats pinnaces, launches, and so forth, were making swiftly and silently for the shore in the pale light of a crescent moon. Every soldier carried three days' rations, as well as entrenching tools. As the men landed they formed and advanced on both sides of what the map gives as a salt lake, but which, during the burning days of summer, is heat-baked, salt-encrusted and even desert. Daylight came, and still the work was proceeding. With the greatest possible speed, artillery and supplies in vast quantities were put on shore, and still no opposition was experienced.

24 HOURS' SILENCE.

Unlike the experience at Seddul Bahr and Gaba Tete, the warships were silent, and for 24 hours the land- ing operation was carried out without a single shot from the big guns or rifle being fired.

The northern section of the great force moved forward in a northeasterly direction, and the southern section advanced in a southeasterly direction towards the left of the Anzac lines. The only Turks on the spot, an observation post of 50 men, surrendered to the first comers, and no enemy was reported in sight until almost night-fall, when our advanced forces were six miles inland.

TURKS RUSHED TO SPOT.

The enemy had during the day received information of our surprising coup, and their forces were rushed to the spot that night. The second night saw an extraordinary weird picture of Turks and British who had cope-by morning night ground. An day long the two lines turned and twisted twisted and turned again, but neither broke.

Our artillery did magnificent work. The machine guns were particularly deadly. The sandy ravines, scantily covered with stunted grass, were often quickly transformed into veritable fortresses which were raked and raked with ferocious fire and taken and retaken with stupendous courage.

AT CLOSE QUARTERS.

The Turks in messed formation on more than one occasion penetrated to the trenches where our men were busy and fighting with staves and bayonets ensued often in those melees. Rifles were fired at a distance of inches and hand grenades were used with awful effect. Thick clouds of choking dust were thrown up by the struggle, which added enormously to the hardships experienced by these heroic soldiers.

The third night came, bringing the relief of coolness, but there was little rest. The trench-diggers worked stolidly on, while attack after attack was launched by the enemy, who were driven back with hideous losses. The morning of Sunday saw the British line unbroken and strengthened. All the men were weary, but ready and whether the army can be bottled up so, or whether they will avoid it by retreat, remains to be seen. But in any event an important step has been taken in the long and costly struggle on the peninsula.

Love, Life and Eugenics.

Suppose the eugenists could have their way and banish love, who would care to live? What purpose would life have? It would have none. There would be no life, only an existence, wearisome and dull. The world feels that love is beautiful, it sees in practice that it is true. Love makes the world, love keeps it, only to love shall it be given in the future. Therefore have poets sung it and story tellers told of it; therefore do eyes shine and cheeks burn for it. Therefore it is the soul of art, of music, of literature.—Atlantic Monthly.

"I fancy you are wondering why I sent for you, Mr. Smart," said Mr. Pless.

"I am."

"Am I to assume that the newspapers were correct in stating that you mean to support my cause with—I may say, to the full extent of your powers?"

"It depends on circumstances, Mr. Pless."

"Circumstances?" He eyed me rather coldly, as if to say, "What right have you to suggest circumstances?"

"Perhaps I should have said that it depends somewhat on what my powers represent."

He crossed his slender legs comfortably and looked at me with a queer little tilt of his left eyebrow, but with an unsmiling visage. He was too cocksure of himself to grant me even so much as an ingratiating smile. Was not I a glory seeking American and he one of the glorious? It would be doing me a favor to let me help him.

"I trust you will understand, Mr. Smart, that I do not ask a favor of you, but rather put myself under a certain obligation for the time being. It is quite impossible for me to prosecute the search for my child without financial assistance from outside sources. My funds are practically exhausted, and the banks refuse to extend my credit. You have publicly declared yourself to be my friend and well wisher. I have asked you to come here tonight, Mr. Smart, to put you to the real test, so to speak. I want $100,000 for six months."

While I was prepared in a sense for the request, the brazenness with which he put it up to me took my breath away.

"Really, Mr. Pless," I mumbled in direct contrast to his sangfroid, "you—your surprise me."

He laughed quietly, almost reassuringly, as he leaned forward in his chair the better to study my face. "I hope you do not think that I expect you to produce so much ready money tonight, Mr. Smart. Oh, no! Any time within the next few days will be satisfactory. Take your time, sir. I appreciate that it requires time to arrange for the—"

I held up my hand with a rather lofty air. "Was it one hundred and fifty thousand that you mentioned or—"

"That was the amount," said he, a sudden glitter in his eyes.

I studied the ceiling with a calculating squint, as if trying to approximate my balance in bank. He watched me closely, almost breathlessly. At last, unable to control his eagerness, he not call it borrowing when one gives ample security for the amount involved."

"What is your idea of borrowing, may I ask?"

"Borrowing is the same thing as asking a favor, according to our conception of the transaction. I am not asking a favor of you, sir. Far from it. I am offering you an opportunity to put a certain amount of money out at a high rate of interest."

"Well, then, we'll look at it in that light. I am not in a position to invest so much money at this time."

"Suppose that I were to say that any day inside the next three or four weeks would be satisfactory to me," said he, as if he were granting me a favor. "Please be seated, Mr. Smart."

"Thank you. I fear it is impossible for me to remain."

"I shall be disappointed. However, another time if not tonight, I trust. And now to come to the point. May I depend upon you to help me at this trying period? A few thousand will be sufficient for present needs, and the balance may go over a few weeks without seriously inconveniencing me."

I actually was staggered. My choler was rising.

"I may as well tell you first as last, Count Tarnoway, that I cannot let you have the money. It is quite impossible. In the first place, I haven't the amount to spare; in the second—"

"Enough, sir," he broke in angrily. "I have committed the common error of regarding one of you as a gentleman. Dash me, if I shall ever do so again! There isn't one in the whole of the United States."

"You will do well, sir, to keep a civil tongue in your head," said I, paling with fury.

"I have nothing more to say to you, Mr. Smart," said he contemptuously. "Good night. Francois, conduct Mr. Smart to the corridor."

Strangely enough, I did not recover my sense of speech until I was well

"That is to say, Britton, the Schmicks and myself."

"The Schmicks?" It was high time that I should laugh. "Ho, no! The Schmicks! Good Lord, man—the Schmicks!"

"The Schmicks are tickled to death over it," said he. "And so is Britton."

Collecting all the sarcasm that I could command at the instant I inquired, "Are you, Mr. Poopendyke, are you not ticklish?"

"Very," said he.

"Well, I'm not!" said I savagely. "What does all this nonsense mean? Don't be an ass, Fred."

"Perhaps you don't know it, Mr. Smart, but you are, in love," said he so convincingly that I was conscious of an abrupt sinking of the heart.

"The deuce you say?" I exclaimed rather blantly.

"Oh, I've seen it coming! For that matter, so has she. It's as plain as the nose—"

I leaped to my feet, startled. "She? You don't—Has she said anything that leads you to believe—Oh, the deuce! What rot!"

"No use getting angry over it," he said consolingly. "Falling in love is the sort of thing a fellow can't help you know. You are heels over head in love with the Countess Tarnoway and—"

"Shut up, Fred! You're going daff, from reading my books or absorbing my manuscripts or—"

"Heaven is my witness. I don't read your books, and I merely correct your manuscripts. God knows there is no romance in that! You are in love. Now, what are you going to do about it?"

"Do about it?" I demanded.

"You can't go on in this way, you know," he said relentlessly. "She won't—"

"Why, you blithering idiot," I roared. "do you know what you are saying? I'm not in love with anybody. My heart is— But never mind! Now, listen to me, Fred. This nonsense has got to cease. I won't have it. Why, she's already got a husband. She's had all she can stand in the way of a husband—" cy to belittle the big things as large upon the small ones?

Unexpectedly I met Britton! "Britton, what's all this gossip going the rounds of the castle I my back?" I exclaimed.

Confound him, he looked pl "It's quite true, sir; quite true."

"Quite true," I roared. "V quite true, sir?"

"Isn't it, sir?" he asked, disma "Isn't what?"

"I mean to say, sir, isn't it true?"

"My God!" I cried, throwing u hands in hopeless despair. "You—wait! I'm going to get to the tom of this. I want the truth. ton. Who put it into that confound of yours that I am—er—in with the countess? Speak! Wh it?"

He lowered his voice, presuma cause I had dropped mine to a loud whisper. I also had glanced both shoulders.

"Begging your pardon, sir, I must be honest, sir. It was first put it into my 'ead, sir."

"I?" My face went the color cardinal's cap.

"You, sir. It's as plain as the on your—"

"That will do, Britton," I com ed. He remained discreetly

"That will do, I say," I repeated what testily. "Do you hear, sir?"

"Yes, sir," he responded. "Th do, you says."

"Ahem! I—ahem!"

Five minutes later I was at her my heart in my mouth. A su inexplicable form of panic took session of me.

After some deliberation I came decision. The proper thing for I do was to show all of them that ridiculous suspicions were wrong.olutely I marched downstairs.

For some two long and extre monotonous days I toiled. I coul deny to myself that I was mi those pleasant hours with the cou I did miss them. I missed Rose and Jinko and Helen Marie Louis toinette and Blake.

Blatchford came to the door.

"A note for you, sir, if you ple said he. He was holding the s almost on a level with his nose.

My heart—my incomprehe heart—gave a leap that sent the rushing to my face.

"Thank you, Blatchford; that do."

"I beg your pardon, sir, but the to be an answer."

"Oh!" said I.

I tore open the envelope.

I managed to dash off a brief in a fairly nonchalant manner. Bl ford almost committed the unpai able crime of slamming the doo bind him, he was in such a hurri off with the message.

Then I went over and stood a Mr. Poopendyke.

"Mr. Poopendyke," said I slo darkly, "what do you know about t violets?"

He quailed. "I hope you don't n Mr. Smart. It's all right. I put of your cards in so that there cou be any mistake."

Halfway up the winding stairwa paused in some astonishment. It just occurred to me that I was g up the steps two at a time and my heart was beating like mad.

I reflected. Here was I racing a like a schoolboy, and for what? V occasion was there for such unse haste? In the first place, it was you to produce as much ready money tonight, Mr. Smart. Oh, no! Any time within the next few days will be satisfactory. Take your time, sir. I appreciate that it requires time to arrange for the"—

I held up my hand with a rather lofty air. "Was it one hundred and fifty thousand that you mentioned or?"

"That was the amount," said he, a sudden glitter in his eyes.

I studied the ceiling with a calculating squint, as if trying to approximate my balance in bank. He watched me closely, almost breathlessly. At last, unable to control his eagerness, he said:

"At the usual rate of interest, you understand."

"What security can you give, Mr. Pless?" I demanded in a very business-like way.

"Oh, you Americans!" he cried, his face beaming with premature relief. "You will pin us down, I see. I do not wonder that you are so rich. I shall give you my personal note, Mr. Smart, for the amount secured by a mortgage—a supplementary mortgage—on the Chateau Tarnowsky."

Tarnowsky! Now I remembered everything. Tarnowsky! The name struck my memory like a blow. What a stupid dolt I had been! The whole world had rung wedding bells for the marriage of the Count Maris Tarnowsky, scion of one of the greatest Hungarian houses, and Aline, the nineteen-year-old daughter of Gwendolen and Jasper Titus of New York, Newport, Tuxedo, Hot Springs, Palm Beach, and so forth—Jasper Titus, the banker and railway magnate, whose name as well as his hand was to be seen in every great financial movement of the last two decades!

My pleasant little mystery had come to a sharp and rather depressing end. A joyous enthusiasm had attended me while I worked in the dark; now a dreary reality stared me in the face. The sparkle was gone.

My cogitations were brief. The count after waiting for a minute or two to let me grasp the full importance of the sacrifice he was ready to make in order to secure me against personal loss blandly announced that there were but two mortgages on the chateau.

"You wish me to accept a third mortgage on the place?" I inquired, pursing my lips.

"The chateau is worth at least a million," he said earnestly. "But why worry about that, Mr. Smart? My personal note is all that is necessary."

"Just a moment, count," I said, leaning forward in my chair. "May I inquire where and from whom you received the impression that I am a rich man?"

He laughed easily. "One who indulges a whim, Mr. Smart, is always rich. Schloss Rothhoefen condemns you to the purgatory of Croesus."

"Croesus would be a poor man in these days," said I. "If he lived in New York he would be wondering where his next meal was to come from. I am not a rich man."

He eyed me coldly. "Have you suddenly discovered the fact, sir?"

"What do you mean?"

"I suggest a way in which you can be of assistance to me, and you hesitate. How am I to take it, sir?"

His infernal air of superiority aggravated me. "You may take it just as you please, Mr. Pless."

"I beg you to remember that I am Count Tarnowsky, Mr.—"

I arose. "The gist of the matter is this: You want to borrow $150,000 of me. That is!"

He hastened to correct me. "I do ont into the corridor. Then I deliberately took a gold coin out of my pocket and pressed it into the valet's hand.

"Kindly give that to your master with my compliments," said I in a voice that was intended to reach Tarnowsky's ear.

Mr. Poopendyke was waiting for me in the courtyard on my return.

"What is the matter with you?" I demanded frantically. "What's up? What are you doing out here with a lantern?"

"I was rather anxious," he said, a note of relief in his voice. "I feared that something unexpected might have befallen you. Five minutes ago the Mr. Pless called up on the telephone and left a message for you. It rather upset me, sir."

"He did, eh? Well, what did he say?"

"He merely commanded me to give you his compliments and to tell you to go to blazes. I told him that you would doubtless be at home a little later on and it would sound very much better if it came from him instead of from me. Whereupon he told me to accompany you, giving rather explicit directions. He appeared to be in a tremendous rage."

I laughed heartily. "I must have got under his confounded skin, after all," I said.

The countess gave a little sigh of relief when I dashed in upon her a few minutes later. She had it all out of me before I had quite recovered my breath after the climb upstairs.

We sat down at the table. "Now tell me everything all over again," she said.

CHAPTER XV.

I Am Informed That I Am In Love.

POOPENDYKE stared for a long time at the portrait of Ludwig the Red. "Isn't it odd that the countess, an American, should be descended from the old Rothhoefens? What a small world it is, after all!"

I became wary. "Nothing odd about it to me. We've all got to descend from somebody."

"I dare say. Still it is odd that she should be hiding in the castle of her ancestors"—

"Not at all, not at all. It just happens to be a handy place. Perfectly natural."

"Perfect rot," I added without rime or reason.

He grinned. "Nevertheless it's the general opinion that you are," said he. I sat up very straight. "What's that?"

"You're in love," said he succinctly. It was like a bomb.

"You're crazy!" I gasped.

"Don't think we're all blind, Mr. Smart."

"We?" I murmured, a curious dampness assailing me.

Now, what are you going to do about it?"

"Do about it?" I demanded.

"You can't go on in this way, you know," he said relentlessly. "She won't"—

"Why, you blithering idiot," I roared, "do you know what you are saying? I'm not in love with anybody. My heart is—is— But never mind! Now, listen to me, Fred. This nonsense has got to cease. I won't have it. Why, she's already got a husband. She's had all she can stand in the way of hush"—

"Rubbish! She can stand a husband or two more, if you are going to look at it in a literal way. Besides, she hasn't a husband. She's chucked him. Good riddance, too. Now, do you imagine for a single instant that a beautiful, adorable young woman of twenty-three is going to spend the rest of her life without a man? Not much. She's free to marry again, and she will."

"Admitting that to be true, why should she marry me?"

"I didn't say she was in love with you. I said you were in love with her."

"Oh," I said, and my face fell. "I see."

He seemed to be considering something. After a few seconds he nodded his head decisively. "Yes, I am sure of it. If the right man gets her she'll make the finest, sweetest wife in the world. She's never had a chance to show what's really in her. She would be adorable, wouldn't she?"

The sudden question caught me unawares.

"She would," I said, with conviction.

"Well," said he slowly and deliberately, "why don't you set about it, then?"

He was so ridiculous that I thought for the fun of it I'd humor him.

"Assuming that you are right in regard to my feelings toward her, Fred, what leads you to believe that I would stand a chance of winning her?" It was a silly question, but I declare I hung on his answer with a tenseness that surprised me.

"Why not? You are good looking, a gentleman, a celebrity and a man. Bless my soul, she could do worse."

"But you forget that I am—let me see—thirty-five, and she is but twenty-three."

To offset that, she has been married and unhappy. That brings her about up to your level, I should say. Her father ought to pay what he owes. He gave a million to get one husband for her. He ought to give a million to be rid of him, so that she could marry the next one without putting him to any expense whatsoever. I told her I thought it was the cheapest and quickest way out of it, and she said, 'I wonder!'"

"Have you been discussing her most sacred affairs with her, you blithering!"

"No, sir," said he, with dignity. "She has been discussing them with me."

I have no recollection of what I said as I stalked out of the room. He called out after me, somewhat pleadingly, I thought:

"Ask Britton what he has to say about it."

Things had come to a pretty pass! Couldn't a gentleman be polite and agreeable to a young and charming lady whom circumstances had thrown in his way without having his motives misconstrued by a lot of snooping, idiotic menials whose only zest in life sprang from a temperamental tenden-had stopped, the hands seemed so stationary. The third time I tried wind it I broke the mainspring, but it was nearly 1 o'clock not much ha was done.

That one little sentence, "Have s deserted me?" grew to be a volumine indictment. I could think of noth else. There was something ineffa sad and pathetic about it. Had s been unhappy because of my deas behavior?

At last I approached her door. Up my soul, my legs were trembling; experienced a silly sensation of fe I hesitated; then, plucking up my co age and putting all silly questions I to belittle the big things and en-upon the small ones?

Unexpectedly I met Britton!

Britton, what's all this gossip I hear of the rounds of the castle behind back?" I exclaimed.

Unfounded him, he looked pleased!
A quite true, sir; quite true."
Quite true?" I roared. "What's true, sir?"
Isn't it, sir?" he asked, dismayed.
Isn't what?"

mean to say, sir, isn't it true?"
Is God?" I cried, throwing up my hands in hopeless despair. "You—you say! I'm going to get to the bottom of this. I want the truth, Britton. Who put it into that confounded mouth of yours that I am—in love with the countess? Speak! Who did lowered his voice, presumably because I had dropped mine to a very whisper. I also had glanced over my shoulders.

Forgive your pardon, sir, but I must be honest, sir. It was you who put it into my head, sir."

"My face went the color of a linen cap."
You, sir. It's as plain as the nose on your face."

"That will do, Britton," I commanded. He remained discreetly silent.

what testily. "Do you hear, sir?"

them! I—ahem!"
A few minutes later I was at her door.
Heart in my mouth. A sudden, impulsive form of panic took possession of me.

After some deliberation I came to a decision. The proper thing for me to do was to show all of them that their suspicious were wrong. Resolutely
I marched downstairs.

For some two long and extremely agonizing days I toiled. I could not bring myself to myself that I was missing the pleasant hours with the countess.
I missed them. I missed Rosemary Jinko and Helen Marie Louise Annette and Blake.

Hutchford came to the door.
Note for you, sir, if you please,"
he said. He was holding the salver up on a level with his nose.

Heart—my incomprehensible thing—gave a leap that sent the blood rushing to my face.

Thank you, Blatchford; that will do. I beg your pardon, sir, but there is no answer."

"H!" said I.
He opened the envelope.
Managed to dash off a brief note in a fairly nonchalant manner. Blatchford almost committed the unpardon-able crime of slamming the door behind him, he was in such a hurry to be with the message.

When I went over and stood above
Poopendyke.

"Poopendyke," said I slowly.
ly, "what do you know about those things?"

Quailed. "I hope you don't mind,
Smart. It's all right. I put one of our cards in so that there couldn't be any mistake."

Halfway up the winding stairways I had in some astonishment. It had occurred to me that I was going up steps two at a time and that heart was beating like mad.

Affected. Here was I racing along like a schoolboy, and for what? What was there for such unseemly display? In the first place, it was now hind me, I rapped resoundingly on the door.

The excellent Hawkes opened it. I started back in dismay. He stood aside impressively.

"Mr. Smart!" he announced.
I caught sight of the countess. She was arranging some flowers on the table. Blatchford was placing the knives and forks. Helen Marie Louise An-tonette stood beside her mistress holding a box of flowers in her hands.

What was it that I had been thinking out there in those gloomy halls?
That she would greet me with a pathetic, hurt look and—

"Good morning!" she cried gayly.
Hurt? Pathetic? She was radiant!
"So glad to see you again. Hawkes has told me how busy you've been."

"Awfully, awfully busy," I murred.
Was it relief at finding her so happy and unconcerned that swept through me? I am morally but shamelessly certain it wasn't.

"Don't you think the roses are lovely in that old silver bowl?"
"Exquisite!"

"Blatchford found it in the plate vault," she said, standing off to admire the effect. "Do you mind if I go on arranging them?" she asked, and without waiting for an answer resumed her employment.

"Bon jour, m'dieu," said Helen Marie Louise Antonette over her mistress' shoulder. One never knows whether a French maid is polite or merely spiteful.

"It seems ages since I saw you last,"
said the countess in a matter of fact tone, jiggling a rose into position and then standing off to study the effect, her head cocked prettily at an angle of inquiry.

It suddenly occurred to me that she had got on very well without me during the ages. The discovery irritated me. She was not behaving at all as I had expected.

"There hasn't been a great deal of news," I said.

She dropped a long stemmed rose and waited for me to pick it up.

"Thank you," she said. "Oh, did it prick you?"

"Yes," said I flatly. Then we both gave the closest attention to the end of my thumb, while I triumphantly squeezed a tiny drop of blood out of it. I sucked it. The incident was closed. She was no longer interested in the laceration.

"So you thought I had deserted you?"
I said, and was a little surprised at the gruffness in my voice.

"The violets appealed me," she said, with a smile. For the first time I noticed that she was wearing a large bunch of them. "You will be bankrupt, Mr. Smart, if you keep on buying roses and violets and orchids for me."

So the roses were mine also! I shot a swift glance at the mantelpiece, irresistibly moved by some mysterious force. There were two bowls of orchids there.

"But they are lovely!" she cried, noting the expression in my face and misconstruing it. "You are an angel."

That was the last straw. "I am nothing of the sort!" I exclaimed, very hot and uncomfortable.

"You are," was her retort. "There!
Isn't it a lovely centerpiece? Now, you must come and see Rosemary.
She adores the new elephant you sent to her."

"Ele?" I began, blinking my eyes.
"Oh—oh, yes, yes! Ha, ha! The elephant!" Good heavens! Had that idiotic Poopendyke started a menage-

"Well, we are bosom friends once

She is perfectly terrible. All French

"Eh?" I gasped.

"Pon my soul!" I murmured.
"And so now they all are saying that I am in love with you," she laughed.
"Isn't it perfectly ludicrous?"

"Perfectly," I said without enthusi-

She started. I thought her eyes nar-

I did so. Hawkes appeared. "Clear

"She was a Colingraft, you know."
"Indeed?" The Colingraft family

He would buy off the count tomorrow if I would permit him to do so. Of late I have been thinking very seri-

There came a sharp rapping on the door at this instant. "Goodness!
You'd think Sherlock Holmes himself

I went to the door.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Count and Herr Schwartzmuller.

OUR luncheon was not as gay nor as unconventional as others that had preceded it. The countess vainly tried to make it as sprightly as its predecessors, but gave over in despair in the face of my tactfulness. Her spirits drooped. She became strangely uneasy and, I thought, preoccupied.

"What is on your mind, countess?" I asked rather gruffly, after a painful silence of some duration.

She regarded me fixedly for a moment. She seemed to be searching my thoughts. "You," she said very succinctly. "Why are you so quiet, so funeral?" I observed a faint tinge of red in her cheeks and an ominous steadiness in her gaze. Was there anger also?

I apologized for my manners and assured her that my work was responsible. Would I come to see her the next day?

"But don't think of coming, Mr. Smart," she declared, "if you feel you cannot spare the time away from your work."

"My dear countess," I exclaimed, displaying a livelier interest than at any time before, "I shall be delighted to come. Permit me to add that my work may go hang."

Her face brightened. "But men must work," she objected.

"Not when women are willing to play," I said.

"Splendid!" she cried. "You are reviving. I feel better. If you are going to be nice I'll let you stay."

"Thanks. I'll do my best."

She seemed to be weighing something in her mind.

"If you don't mind what the servants are saying about us, Mr. Smart, I am quite sure I do not."

I caught my breath.

"Oh, I understand everything," she cried mischievously, before I could stammer anything in reply. "They are building a delightful romance around us. And why not? Why begrudge them the pleasure? No harm can come of it, you see."

"Certainly no harm," I floundered.

"The gossip is confined to the castle. It will not go any further. We can afford to laugh in our sleeves, can't we?"

"Ha, ha!" I laughed in a strained effort, but not into my sleeve. "I rejoice to hear you say that you don't mind No more do I. It's rather jolly."

"Fancy any one thinking we could possibly fall in love with each other," she scoffed. Her eyes were very bright. There was a suggestion of cold water in that remark.

"Yes, just fancy," I agreed.

"Absurd!"

crouse? Was that the way it appeared to her? I had a little spirit left. "Quite as ludicrous as the fancy Britton has about me. He is obsessed by the idea that I am in love with you. What do you think of that?"

She started. I thought her eyes narrowed for a second. "Ridiculous," she said very simply. Then she arose abruptly. "Please ring the bell for Hawkes."

I did so. Hawkes appeared. "Clear the table, Hawkes," she said. "I want you to read all these newspaper clippings, Mr. Smart," she went on, pointing to a bundle on a chair near the window. We crossed the room. "Now that you know who I am, I insist on your reading all that the papers have been saying about me during the past five or six weeks."

I protested, but she was firm. "Every one else in the world has been reading about my affairs, so you must do likewise. No, it isn't necessary to read all of them. I will select the most lurid and the most glowing. You see there are two sides to the case. The papers that father can control are united in defending my action; the European press is just the other way. Sit down, please. I'll hand them to you."

For an hour I sat there in the window absorbing the astonishing history of the Tarnowsky abduction case. I felt rather than observed the intense scrutiny with which she favored me.

At last she tossed the remainder of the bundle unread into a corner. Her face was aglow with pleasure.

"You've read both sides, and I've watched you, oh, so closely. You don't believe what the papers over here have to say. I saw the scowls when you read the translations that Mr. Poopendyke has typed for me. Now I know that you do not feel so bitterly toward me as you did at first."

I was resolved to make a last determined stand for my original convictions.

"But our own papers—the New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago journals—still voice in a way my principal contention in the matter, countess. They deplore the wretched custom among the idle but ambitious rich that made possible this whole lamentable state of affairs. I mean the custom of getting a title into the family at any cost."

"My dear Mr. Smart," she said seriously, "do you really contend that all of the conjugal unhappiness and unrest of the world is confined to the

There came a sharp rapping on the door at this instant. "Goodness! You'd think Sherlock Holmes himself was at the door!" she cried.

I went to the door.

"Can you come down at once, Mr. Smart?" Poopendyke said in a voice not meant to reach the ears of the countess.

"What's up?" I questioned sharply.

"The jig, I'm afraid," he whispered.

"Good Lord! Detectives?"

"No. Count Tarnowsky and a stranger."

"Impossible!"

The countess, alarmed by our manner, quickly crossed the room.

"What is it?" she demanded.

"The count is downstairs," I said.

"Don't be alarmed. Nothing can happen. You"—

She laughed. "Oh, is that all? My dear Mr. Smart, he has come to see you about the frescoes."

"But I have insulted him."

"Not permanently," she said. "I know him too well. He is like a leech. He has given you time to reflect and therefore regret your action of the other night. Go down and see him."

Poopendyke volunteered further information. "There is also a man down there, a cheap looking person, who says he must see the Countess Tarnowsky at once."

"A middle aged man with the upper button of his waistcoat off?" she asked sharply.

"I—I can't say as to the button."

"I am expecting one of my lawyers."

It must be he. He was to have a button off."

"I'll look him over again," said Poopendyke.

"Do. And be careful not to let the count catch a glimpse of him. That would be fatal."

"No danger of that. He went at once to old Conrad's room."

"Good! I had a note from him this morning, Mr. Smart. He is Mr. Bangs of London."

"May I inquire, countess, how you manage to have letters delivered to you here? Isn't it extremely dangerous to have them go through the mails?"

Making the Little Farm Pay

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

Owners of little farms who are developing a program of diversified crops can double their profits by canning fruits and vegetables.

Nearly every family has the ability and most of the apparatus required for an ordinary canning business. Not only do the prices of canned goods give a double profit on many products, but there is a large saving in perishable articles which otherwise would go to waste. This is a money making plan for any farm family and deserves careful consideration.

The canning season opens in June with strawberries, currants, gooseberries, rhubarb, etc. Following in quick succession we have red and black raspberries, loganberries and cherries. The latter half of July finds canners busy with beets and the first delivery of string beans. Bartlett pears and blackberries begin to come after the middle of August. September sees the last of the peas, string beans and plums. This is the month for early apples. During October we are canning apples, corn, tomatoes and pumpkins. An evaporator is used for berries, peaches and apples when the business becomes a little more extended. A dried fruit packing department is one of the most profitable lines of business.

Almost every housewife has a tin clothes boiler which she can easily convert into a sterilizing vat in which to boil the products which she desires to can. The only things necessary are a tight cover and a false bottom. The false bottom is made of wire netting and is needed to prevent the jars from coming in contact with the bottom of the boiler, which would crack them. To make these boilers take an ordinary No. 16 wire netting of half inch mesh, which is cut to fit the bottom of the boiler. If the netting is not available use thin pieces of wood. A patent open door steam cooker is even more convenient than a clothes boiler.

The water seal outfit is a combined hot water and steam canner with a self sealed top which permits the prod-

CLOVER LEAF WEEVIL.

A Destructive Pest and Advice For Its Control.

[Prepared by P. W. Mason, Purdue university agricultural station.]

Watch your clover and alfalfa fields. The clover leaf weevil is again beginning to put in its appearance. Last spring there was considerable excitement among the farmers, due to a large outbreak of this insect throughout Indiana, especially in the western half of the state and extending from the northern extremity to the Ohio river. It attacked both clover and alfalfa and often took a good share of the leaves from a field.

Due to the timely assistance of a fungous disease which killed off many of the insects last year, it was predicted that we would not have another outbreak this spring. However, there seems to have been plenty left for seed, as there has already been one serious case reported. This was in Montgomery county, where a seven acre field of alfalfa was very heavily infested, apparently every plant having as many as a dozen of the insects. Since more cases may occur, it is thought best to publish a brief account of this insect and recommendations for its control.

When the larva is full grown it spins a silken, lacelike cocoon either on the surface of the ground or just under the soil. From this there hatches the adult brownish snout beetle, which lays eggs for the next fall. These adults sometimes do as much damage to the second crop of clover as the young do to the first crop.

In the late spring a fungous disease will usually attack the larvae or slugs. This, curiously enough, causes them to climb up and curl around a blade of timothy or other vegetation, where they die and turn grayish white in color. They can often be found in large numbers in this condition. This would be a very good thing did it end

GARDEN ANTS HARMLESS.

Do Not Injure Plants, and Nests May Be Easily Destroyed.

Prepared by United States department of agriculture.]

An unusual number of complaints have been received this year by the department of agriculture from persons who say that ants are injuring their lawns and gardens. As a matter of fact, these ants do little harm, and the injury that is attributed to them is usually caused by something else. In large numbers, however, the small conical nests which they build on lawns are somewhat unsightly and on this account it may be desirable in some cases to destroy them.

Where there is only a small area to be covered the simplest method is to drench the nests with boiling water. Another simple remedy is to spray the lawn with kerosene emulsion or with a very strong soap wash prepared by dissolving any common laundry soap in water at the rate of one pound or one-half pound to a gallon of water. Such methods are particularly well adapted to small lawns and for the ordinary little lawn ant.

For larger ant colonies of other species, bisulphide of carbon, a chemical which can be purchased at any drug store, will be found effective. This substance can be placed in the nest by means of an oil can or small syringe, the quantity required varying from one-half ounce for a small nest to two or three ounces or more for a large one. An oil can with a long spout is a convenient instrument, as it can be inserted into the nests and the liquid injected without its being brought close to the operator's nose, for the fumes of bisulphide of carbon, although not poisonous, are nauseating. To facilitate the entrance into the nest of the chemical, the ant hole can be enlarged with a sharp stick or iron rod. After the bisulphide of carbon has been injected, the opening should be closed by pressure of the foot in order to retain the bisulphide. This will penetrate slowly throughout the underground channels of the nest and kill all the inmates. It is important to remember that while bisulphide is perfectly harmless if kept away from all fire, it is very inflammable and may, under certain circumstances, explode when ignited.

FOR YOUNG FOLK

Story of a Little Girl Who Successful Farmer.

MYRTLE MANN PRIZE WINNER

She Won the State Championship of Nebraska Boys and Girls' Garden Club—Puzzle and Games For People—Interesting Information.

When boys and girls make up minds to do something worth they usually can win success if stick to their tasks. Last summer the state of Nebraska there was ducted under the joint auspices of United States department of agriculture and the agricultural extension service of the Nebraska university farm a contest among boys and girls. The object was to teach the child farming in a practical way.

CURRANTS AND GOOSEBERRIES FOR CANNING.

ucts to be boiled at a temperature 2

ucts to be boiled at a temperature 2 degrees higher than the homemade outfit will. This means that for many things the time of boiling is shortened. Corn takes only 180 minutes this way, where it takes 240 minutes in a homemade outfit. The other outfits may also be obtained from regular dealers. They depend entirely on steam instead of hot water for cooking fruit and vegetables. They are called steam pressure cookers. The cooker with five pounds of pressure does the work in much less time than the water seal outfit, and the cooker with a pressure of ten pounds will accomplish the work in about half the time needed for the five pound cooker.

Apples.—Select red apples of a fine acid flavor and wipe but do not peel. Remove any defective spots and divide into quarters, core and cut each piece into fourths. Add just enough cold water to make them juicy, and heat and cook slowly until tender. The skins add much to the flavor and coloring of this preserve. Lift carefully into cans while hot and seal.

Plums.—For green or blue plums allow three pints of water and one cupful of sugar for six quarts of fruit. Heat them slowly before putting in the sugar. Then add the sugar and cook gently for five or six minutes.

Peaches.—Choose only the best, but they should be firm to the touch. Peel and divide each into halves, removing the pits. Put into a preserving kettle and add one quart of cold water to every six quarts of the prepared peaches. Bring gradually to the boiling point, then can and seal at once.

In all canning operations carefully study the directions which come with the apparatus or which dealers will furnish in printed form. While the work is simple enough the methods require taste and care. For instance, select uniform tomatoes and see that they are free from blemishes. Wash them before scalding to prevent any dirt from entering. After washing place them in a sugar sack or wire strainer and put into a boiler of scalding water for one minute. After taking the tomatoes from the water the skin will slip off easily. The can should be washed just before putting in the tomatoes. Fill the can moderately and then add a teaspoonful of salt and one of sugar for each quart of fruit. Put on the lid closely and place in the water to boil for twenty minutes. Be sure not to put cold cans in hot water.

When Incubator Heat Fails.

If by some mischance the lamp of your incubator should go out and the eggs become quite cold to the touch do not throw them away, especially if the trouble comes in the second half of the incubation period. Start up the heat as soon as possible and keep the machine going. It is very probable that life was not destroyed, although it may take an extra day or more to finish the hatch. We have known eggs to be left out of the incubator by mistake for twelve hours or more and still prove a good hatch. Give plenty of time at the last until you can assure yourself of the result.—James Sumner stays eggs for the next fall. These adults sometimes do as much damage to the second crop of clover as the young do to the first crop.

In the late spring a fungous disease will usually attack the larvae or slugs. This, curiously enough, causes them to climb up and curl around a blade of timothy or other vegetation, where they die and turn grayish white in color. They can often be found in large numbers in this condition. This would be a very good thing did it end here, but the large number of diseased larvae attached to the plants are often dangerous to live stock which may be pasturing in the field. Serious illness of cattle, due to this cause, has been reported from other states.

The farmer should examine his clover and alfalfa fields very carefully, looking at the base of the plants for the greenish slugs. If only a few are found no control measures need be applied. If present in large numbers something should be done at once. At this time of the year a field may be rolled with a heavy roller without injuring the crop. This will not only crush many of the insects, but will also benefit the field by compacting the soil.

If rolling is impractical, or does not kill enough of the insects, it will be necessary to resort to spraying. Use two to three pounds of lead arsenate (paste) to a fifty gallon barrel of water. Dissolve it first in a bucket of water and then pour into the barrel and stir so as to thoroughly mix it with the water. Any kind of a spray pump may be used. If a potato sprayer is at hand it will be most convenient to use.

Do not permit live stock to get into the field after spraying, as they may be poisoned. The spraying will not injure the crop for hay, as the first good rain will wash off the poison.

Potatoes For Stock Feed.

The heavy production and the low price of potatoes have directed attention to their value for stock feed. Hitherto this subject has not received much attention in this country because under ordinary conditions other feeds are undoubtedly much cheaper and better. Some estimate that even at 15 cents a bushel it is more expensive to feed potatoes to stock than it is to feed silage, while on the other hand it is scarcely probable that the farmer can raise potatoes for much less than 30 cents a bushel. Their actual value for feed depends upon many factors, but it is better to make some use of the potatoes on hand rather than let them rot.

In Germany, where the potato crop is proportionately far greater than in this country, the question has been more thoroughly studied. The tubers may be used for feeding cows, horses, sheep and pigs, but they are best adapted for pigs. To secure the best results with swine the potatoes should first be cooked and then made into a thick mush mixed with the cornmeal or other grain. If skim milk is added the value of the feed is much increased.

In feeding potatoes to dairy cows from one-half peck to one peck should be fed to start with. They should be given raw and should be run through a root cutter to prevent choking the cows. An excessive feed of potatoes to a dairy cow is liable to cause scours, but as much as one-half bushel a cow a day has been fed without bad results. In addition to the nutrients contained potatoes give succulence to a ration, a factor of importance in feeding dairy cows.

The German experiments with potato flour for bread during the war illustrate the food value of the potato.

a sharp stick or iron rod. After the bisulphide of carbon has been injected, the opening should be closed by pressure of the foot in order to retain the bisulphide. This will penetrate slowly throughout the underground channels of the nest and kill all the inmates. It is important to remember that while bisulphide is perfectly harmless if kept away from all fire, it is very inflammable and may, under certain circumstances, explode when ignited.

Except for the unsightly appearance of their nests, however, the lawn ants do no appreciable harm. They enter houses very rarely and, on the whole, may be said to do no harm of any kind except in so far as they lessen the attractive appearance of the lawn. On the other hand, it is quite possible that by bringing up from the lower depths sand and earth they may distinctly increase fertility by forming a top dressing or soil mulch, and at the same time permit better aeration of the earth.

To Hang a Gate.

Take a locust stake 3 by 3 inches in size and 18 inches long and drive it into the ground until only three inches are left above the surface. Bore an auger hole in the top of the stake and put an iron bolt in the hole; then bore a hole the same size in the bottom of the gate post and place it over the bolt, as shown in the cut. Fasten the gate at the top with a piece of strap iron bent and bolted as shown.—South-eastern Agriculturist.

What animals are admitted to the opera? Ermines, beavers, raccoons and white kids.

Why is a child like flannel? Because it shrinks from washing.

Why is the root of the tongue like a dejected man? Because it is down in the mouth.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

Story of a Little Girl Who Is a Successful Farmer.

MYRTLE MANN PRIZE WINNER.

She Won the State Championship of the Nebraska Boys and Girls' Gardening Club—Puzzle and Games For Small People—Interesting Information.

When boys and girls make up their minds to do something worth while they usually can win success if they stick to their tasks. Last summer in a state of Nebraska there was conducted under the joint auspices of the United States department of agriculture and the agricultural extension service of the Nebraska university a contest among boys and girls. The object was to teach the children farming in a practical way. There twelve years of age. When it is considered that a city lot is but 25 by 100 feet in area, Myrtle's farming seems all the more wonderful. She was awarded the state championship, having beaten all competitors.

Rapid Count.

For this game the hostess should write on morsels of paper all the numbers from one to twenty, writing each several times.

Jumble the numbers several times in a basket and place the basket on a table or stand around which the company sit.

Each person in turn takes one of the papers and, upon seeing what number it contains, must name some celebrated thing connected with this number. For example, a person drawing the number seven could name the seven sleepers, the seven wonders of the world, "We Are Seven" and seventh son of a seventh son.

The papers are retained to count to their credit by all those who succeed in answering.

Those who fail must pass their papers to those seated next to them, who in turn try to name something appropriate.

Any one failing must give a forfeit to be redeemed later on.

Facts About Bells.

We do not know in what country bells were first used, but their origin dates way back in the past. In the writings of Moses we are told that "bells of gold" were suspended from the robe of the high priest when he officiated in the service of the sanctuary.

History tells us that bells were appendages to the royal costumes of the ancient Persians, and Aeschylus and Euripides say, "They were concealed within the hollows of the shields of Grecian heroes and commanders."

Washing White Silk.

White silk need never be cleaned, but should be washed. It is true that unless you are careful it will turn yellow, but if the silk is washed as it should be it will stay quite white and new in color. In the first place, silk should never be allowed to become much soiled, for it will turn yellow if too much soiled. It should be washed with warm (not hot) water and castile soap. The silk should be well rinsed

FOR THE BOUDOIR.

A new trinket to add to milady's boudoir is what might be called a telephone closet. It may be a most elaborate creation of brocade and gilt lace, or it may take on the more modest garb of dull flowered cretonne. It is usually made up, however, in the material of the rest of the boudoir or bedroom "fixings." This little telephone cover is made on a frame or cardboard, like the half of a cylinder about sixteen inches high, with a diameter of fourteen inches. A straight piece of cardboard sixteen inches high and about eighteen inches long is covered with the material to be used. If the outside is cretonne it may be lined with a plain color. A piece of wire is sewed into the bottom of this piece and bent so that it holds the covered cardboard into a half cylinder. Two doors are covered in the same way and connected to the cylinder by means of a cotton or gilt braid. A straight piece of the material is shirred into the top for a "roof" and caught in the middle under a covered button or cabochon of braid. At the back and bottom of the cage is cut a small hole to allow for the telephone wire to pass through. The whole "closet" is simply placed over the phone, and when the warning bell rings milady opens the little doors, takes her message and replies and replaces the phone in the cage, tucking away what is often a most jarring note in an otherwise quaint, old fashioned boudoir.

cent pair of pins at the notion counter, melt the wax carefully so that it does not scorch to a darker shade and dip in the pins. Dry, and, presto, you have the enameled baby's gift you desired.

Perhaps you want a string of beads. You can make them, too, of sealing wax. You can dip wooden beads—the kind that come for children to string on stout thread—in gold sealing wax, and when they have dried you can dip half of each bead in again and let that dry and then put just a little of the bead's surface in again and so work up a bead of irregular shape, like the lovely Venetian beads of glass and gold. You can use other colors, too, with the gold.

Then you can make beads entirely out of the wax if you learn to work skillfully, and so have a chain of beads with a foundation of nothing but wax.

In the first place, silk should never be allowed to become much soiled, for it will turn yellow if too much soiled. It should be washed with warm (not hot) water and castile soap. The silk should be well rinsed and dipped in blued water at the last. Care should be taken not to have the water too blue, but just enough to have the silk keep that new white shade. Hang it up until it is not quite dry, but dry enough to press nicely with a warm iron.

SEALING WAX KNICKKNACKS.

Beautify Yourself and Your House by Mastering New Art of Decoration.

Do you know how to use sealing wax to beautify yourself and your house? No? Well, it is a new art, but it is one worth mastering.

With sealing wax of various colors, some shoe buttons, a little lamp and a small metal dish or ladle you can make very attractive "enameled" buttons for your new chiffon blouse. Melt some pink and blue and green and gray wax in the ladle, without mixing them very thoroughly, and dip the buttons in. Then let them dry, and you will see that you have some lovely round buttons with almost opalescent coloring.

Or suppose you want a pair of pins for baby's frock and do not feel inclined to pay $1.50 for the blue enameled sort you desire. Buy a stick of the lovely pale blue sealing wax and a ten card set of brass, also a humidor for tobacco. The ash tray separates into four sections for individual use. In the center is a patent lighter, and beneath is provided space for the cards.

The Time to Call.

The well bred woman is more than particular in the matter of calls—calls of common courtesy, dinner calls, calls of condolence or of congratulation. For the woman of few social obligations there is absolutely no excuse for ignoring the few rules to be observed in calling. Only the woman whose social life is one mad round of entertainments is justified in making her cards serve calling duty without her.

In a large city women call between the hours of 3 and half past 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

If the woman on whom you intend to call has an afternoon at home always select that day for your call.

In the small towns, the suburbs and country colonies calling is permissible both afternoon and evening, but even a suburbanite does not like to be caught unawares in the morning.

The following prices f.o.b. Ford, Ontario., effective Aug. 2, '15

Ford Touring Car . . .	$530.00
Ford Town Car . . . .	$780.00

No speedometer included in this year's equipment, otherwise cars fully equipped.

There can be no assurance given against an advance in these prices at any time. We guarantee, however, that there will be no reduction in these prices prior to August 1, 1916.

Profit Sharing with Retail Buyers

On August 1, 1914 we made the announcement that if we could make and sell at retail 30,000 Ford cars between August 1, 1914 and August 1, 1915 we would share profits with the retail purchasers. We have sold only 18,774 Ford cars in the time specified and, therefore, are unable to share our profits with those who purchased Ford cars between the above dates.

Our plan to profit-share with retail purchasers of Ford cars during 1914-1915 was not successful due to conditions which we could not possibly foresee at the time we made our announcement last August. The war and the consequent unsettled conditions of business seriously affected our sales and increased our manufacturing costs so that during the last year we did not earn a profit not required for the normal expansion of our business in a manufacturing and service way.

However we still have confidence in our profit-sharing plan, but a realization of the uncertainty of conditions generally makes it advisable to defer any announcement of future profit-sharing until a later date.

We are, however, positive we cannot reduce costs for several months, and therefore can offer no profit-sharing for cars delivered during August, September and October, 1915.

Merchant Arrested.

On Tuesday afternoon a sensation was caused in town by the arrest of Mr. Michael Maker, on a charge of conspiring with another to commit the crime of destroying a building by fire. He appeared before the Police Magistrate on Wednesday and was remanded for eight days, as the Crown was not ready to proceed with the case. On the objection of the Crown bail was not granted. The arrest was made in connection with the fire some weeks ago which partially destroyed the frame building on Dundas street, occupied by Messrs. Walter Boves and Mr. Adrick. Inspector Reburn, who has been working upon the case for some days, placed an interesting report before the court. According to the inspector's findings, Michael Adrick bought the business from Maker on November 17 last for the sum of $700, $50 in cash and a mortgage for $650. The stock was insured for $1,000 in the Northern Company. Adrick protested, after conducting the business for some time, that he had been charged too large a sum, and it is alleged, threatened to allow Maker to foreclose his mortgage. The latter, according to Adrick and his wife, then urged them to set fire to the place, and promised them $200 if the job were a success. He stated according to their testimony, that he had twice attempted the job himself without success.
